The Huli Response To Illness:

The Huli Response to Illness S. J. Frankel, 1981 The Huli Response to Illness Stephen Frankel, 1986-11-13 Dr Frankel's study of the rapid transformation of traditional medical care among the Huli of New Guinea by Western treatments strikingly combines the methods of social anthropology and epidemiology. Until the 1950s the Huli used only their own form of therapy including symptomatic treatments, specialist surgery and major ritual intended to enlist the support of spirits. Since then, superficially at least, there has been a rejection of many traditional measures and a corresponding enthusiasm for Western treatments underpinned by Christianity. The Huli Response to Illness analyses the rich network of traditional belief relating to the classification and causation of illness, patterns of disease, historical experience and the organisation of society. The methodological approach presented is notable not only for the study of medical pluralism but also for examining the conditions which may influence responses to programmes of health improvement. The study as a whole integrates material conventionally divided between anthropological and medical texts and powerfully demonstrates the limitations of this traditional separation.

Conflict and Resource Development in the Southern Highlands of Papua New Guinea Nicole Haley, Ron May, 2007-11-01 The Southern Highlands is one of Papua New Guinea's most resource-rich provinces, but for a number of years the province has been riven by conflict. Longstanding inter-group rivalries, briefly set aside during the colonial period, have been compounded by competition for the benefits provided by the modern state and by fighting over the distribution of returns from the several big mining and petroleum projects located within the province or impinging upon it. Deaths from the various conflicts over the past decade number in the hundreds. As a result of inter-group fighting, criminal activity and vandalism, a number of businesses have withdrawn from the province. Roadblocks and ambushes have made travel dangerous in many parts, and expatriate missionaries and aid workers have left. Many public servants have abandoned their posts, with the result that state services are not provided. Corruption is rife. Police are often reluctant to act because they are outnumbered and outgunned. This volume brings together a number of authors with deep experience of the Southern Highlands to examine the underlying dynamics of resource development and conflict in the province. Its primary purpose is to provide some background to recent events, but the authors also explore possible approaches to limiting the human and economic costs of the ongoing conflict and breakdown of governance.

Health and Ethnicity Helen Macbeth,Prakash Shetty,2000-12-07 In modern multicultural societies the topic of health and ethnicity has become increasingly recognised as highly relevant All too frequently academic coverage of the topic has been scattered in specialist literature of different disciplines a book bringing these perspectives together has so far been lacking The aim of the book is to explain the diversity in health experience due to determinants and factors that can be described as ethnic Both ethnicity and health are words that have stimulated semantic debate and yet too seldom is sufficient sensitivity given over to the complexity of the issue
