The Home Acre:

The Home Acre Edward Roe, 2014-05-14 Land hunger is so general that it may be regarded as a natural craving Artificial modes of life it is true can destroy it but it is apt to reassert itself in later generations To tens of thousands of bread winners in cities a country home is the dream of the future the crown and reward of their life toil Increasing numbers are taking what would seem to be the wiser course and are combining rural pleasures and advantages with their business As the questions of rapid transit are solved the welfare of children will turn the scale more and more often against the conventional city house or flat A home CAN be created in rented dwellings and apartments but a home for which we have the deed a cottage surrounded by trees flowers lawn and garden is the refuge which best satisfies the heart By means of such a suburban nook we can keep up our relations with Nature and all her varied and health giving life The tired man returning from business finds that his excited brain will not cease to act He can enjoy restoring rest in the complete diversion of his thoughts he can think of this tree or that plant and how he can fill to advantage unoccupied spaces with other trees flowers and vegetables
