Aid cuts, COVID-19 leave child care centers struggling

Faced with COVID-related revenue losses and aid cuts from the state, Pennsylvania's child care providers say they're struggling to survive.

Advocates are calling on the state to increase subsidies and provide much-needed help to these centers, who they say are critical to the state's economic recovery.

"Child care centers in my district have done everything in their power to operate safely and provide a desperately needed service to working parents," said state Sen. Maria Collett, D-12, Lower Merion, and a member of the Women's Health Caucus. "But this does not come without a cost."

Day care providers said they're struggling for three major reasons:

- Since the pandemic began, more parents have been keeping their children home, leading to less income for care providers.
- Costs for extra cleaning supplies and paying workers for the extra time needed to sanitize equipment have risen as revenue has fallen.
- Staffing declines have occurred because some child care workers feared contracting the virus from the young children in their care, or from family members who bring them to the centers.

"It's a burden," said Nancy Thompson, who runs the Jolly Toddlers Early Education Center, Pre-School and Kindergarten in Upper Southampton. "We're not like the school districts. We can't raise taxes. We have to raise it on the parents. The parents can't afford it."

Providers closing as stipends shrink

Since March, 17 child care centers have closed in Bucks County and 21 in Montgomery County, according to the advocacy group Public Citizens for Children and Youth. That's out of an estimated 250 centers in Bucks, including after-school and in-home facilities, and about 400 in Montgomery County, the group said.

Across Pennsylvania, the state Department of Human Services reported 544 permanent child care center closures at the end of January. Sixty-three were closed by the state's Office of Child Development and Early Learning due to noncompliance to child care regulations, while the rest closed voluntarily. During the same time period, 372 child care providers opened, resulting in a net loss of 172 centers statewide.

Pennsylvania provides stipends to child care centers for some children in their care, and for the first six months of the pandemic, the state let those stipends continue regardless of enrollment declines.

However, in September, those payments were cut for children no longer in attendance. Collett said Montgome-

Fracking banned in Delaware River

Kathryne Rubright Phoenix Record
USA TODAY NETWORK

Fracking has been banned on 13,539 square miles of land surrounding the Delaware River following a 4-0 vote Thursday by the Delaware River Basin Commission.

The ban is a long-sought win for environmental activists and a defeat to some landowners in the watershed who would have liked to profit from the natural gas below their properties.

Pennsylvania Department of Environmental Protection Secretary Patrick McDonnell, alternate for Gov. Tom Wolf, voted in favor of the new regulations, along with alternates for Gov. John Carney, of Delaware, Gov. Phil Murphy of New Jersey and Gov. Andrew Cuomo of New York.

The federal representative, Brigadier General Thomas S. Tickner, commander and division engineer of the North Atlantic Division of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, abstained, citing the need for more time to coordinate with the new Biden administration.

Reading a statement from the governor, McDonnell said Wolf is "proud to join with other DRBC commissioners in preserving the water resources of this unique region for generations to come."

By a 5-0 vote, the DRBC also approved a resolution to start a rulemaking process regarding the exportation of water for fracking elsewhere, and the importation of fracking wastewater.

Issues activists including the Delaware River Frack Ban Coalition have pushed to see addressed.

The watershed includes all or part of 17 Pennsylvania counties, seven of which sit entirely or partly over the
