Stories From Greek Tragedy:

Greek Tragedy Aeschylus, Euripides, Sophocles, 2004-08-26 Agememnon is the first part of the Aeschylus s Orestian trilogy in which the leader of the Greek army returns from the Trojan war to be murdered by his treacherous wife Clytemnestra In Sophocles Oedipus Rex the king sets out to uncover the cause of the plague that has struck his city only to discover the devastating truth about his relationship with his mother and his father Medea is the terrible story of a woman s bloody revenge on her adulterous husband through the murder of her own children Stories from the Greek Tragedians Alfred John Church, 2020-09-28 In the meantime within the palace Alcestis prepared herself for death And first she washed her body with pure water from the river and then she took from her coffer of cedar her fairest apparel and adorned herself therewith Then being so arranged she stood before the hearth and prayed saying O Queen Her behold I depart this day Do thou therefore keep my children giving to this one a noble husband and to that a loving wife And all the altars that were in the house she visited in like manner crowning them with myrtle leaves and praying at them Nor did she weep at all or groan or grow pale But at the last when she came to her chamber she cast herself upon the bed and kissed it crying I hate thee not though I die for thee giving myself for my husband And thee another wife shall possess not more true than I am but maybe more fortunate And after she had left the chamber she turned to it again and again with many tears And all the while her children clung to her garments and she took them up in her arms the one first and then the other and kissed them And all the servants that were in the house bewailed their mistress nor did she fail to reach her hand to each of them greeting him There was not one of them so vile but she spake to him and was spoken to again After this when the hour was now come when she must die she cried to her husband for he held her in his arms as if he would have stayed her that she should not depart I see the boat of the dead and Charon standing with his hand upon the pole who calleth me saying Hasten thou delayest us and then again A winged messenger of the dead looketh at me from under his dark eyebrows and would lead me away Dost thou not see him Then after this she seemed now ready to die yet again she gathered strength and said to the King Listen and I will tell thee before I die what I would have thee do Thou knowest how I have given my life for thy life For when I might have lived and had for my husband any prince of Thessaly that I would and dwelt here in wealth and royal state yet could I not endure to be widowed of thee and that thy children should be fatherless There fore I spared not myself though thy father and she that bare thee betrayed thee But the Gods have ordered all this after their own pleasure So be it Do thou therefore make this recompense which indeed thou owest to me for what will not a man give for his life Thou lovest these children even as I love them Suffer them then to be rulers in this house and bring not a step mother over them who shall hate them and deal with them unkindly A son indeed hath a tower of strength in his father But O my daughter how shall it fare with thee for thy mother will not give thee in marriage nor be with thee comforting thee in thy travail of children when a mother most showeth kindness and love And now farewell for I die this day And thou too farewell my husband Thou lovest a true wife and ye too my
