

Activities to help learners who may see upsetting content

Activities to help learners who may see upsetting content

Reading & Writing Activities

Divide learners into groups and give them each a scenario (page 3) to read and discuss, and then share their ideas and advice.

Get learners to write their own short stories about someone who sees something upsetting online. Explain the stories must have a positive resolution.

Discuss the advice given on page 1, then have learners write acrostic poems around key words like 'report' or 'pause'. These could then be used as part of a display with an advice theme.

You could give all learners a character to work with, or even the first half of a story to expand on. Use these stories as the basis for a discussion around how to respond to seeing unpleasant content.

Sports & Drama Activities

Place solutions such as 'stop looking', 'tell an adult' or 'get help' around a space, perhaps with obstacles for learners to navigate around.

Have learners write and perform scripts for the scenarios (page 3). Have the audiences or other learners clap or call out when the performers should 'pause' what they are doing or watching and seek help.

Read out the scenarios (page 3) and have learners race to their chosen solution and ask them to explain their choices.

Have learners think of physical actions for commands like 'put device down', 'tell an adult' or 'turn away from screen'. Have learners move around the room and call out a prompt, e.g., 'scary video'. Learners should choose their responses and perform the associated action.

Art & Design Activities

Have learners create and play their own 'happy viewing' board game, where safe and smart choices help the players succeed, and obstacles take the form of pop-ups, scary videos or games.

Using the scenarios (page 3), have learners draw the different physical and emotional reactions they might have if they saw something upsetting online.

Work together or in small groups to create a set of top tips for dealing with upsetting content online. Have learners use art resources to create a series of online safety posters or leaflets for the school.

Learners could then draw symbols to represent the different solutions available.

Educator's Guidance

The online world offers many benefits for children and young people, however there is also the risk of being exposed to content which is upsetting, harmful or inappropriate.

Safeguarding advice

If you become aware of a learner having seen upsetting content online:

- reassure the learner that it's okay to have an emotional response to what they have seen and that you are there to help them
- keep your own responses calm and supportive
- avoid showing strong emotions like shock, anger or disgust, even if the content is distressing
- follow your school or setting's safeguarding policies and procedures to escalate the incident to a designated safeguarding lead/person, if necessary

Reducing the risk

- Don't click on unfamiliar links or pop-ups.
- Look for clues that something might not be okay for you to see. This could include age ratings, comments, reviews, or content descriptions.
- If you're unsure, ask a trusted adult to look before you do.

Responding to an incident

- It's not your fault that this has happened.
- Stop looking e.g. pause the video, turn the device over, or turn the device off.
- Talk to an adult about what you have seen and how it made you feel.
