

DEFENSE MECHANISMS

Defense mechanisms are strategies people utilize to cope with anxiety or disturbing thoughts and feelings. They can be unconscious and involve distortion of reality.

DEFINITION

Although defense mechanisms are often considered negative, Freud believed they were necessary for healthy human functioning.

Without them, the conscious mind would be much more vulnerable to negatively charged emotional input, such as that pertaining to anxiety and sadness" (p. 1).

EXAMPLE

Denial: When something is too upsetting to handle, a person might just reject that it exists. For example, when an older sibling refuses to admit that their actions created problems for the younger sibling. Instead of acknowledging the facts, the older sibling denies what happened.
