Types of Sensory

There are three fundamental different types of sensory areas of the cortex: primary, secondary, and association.

The primary sensory cortex is the area of sensory cortex of the system that receives most of its input directly from the thalamic relay of nuclei of the system.

The secondary sensory cortex is comprises the areas of sensory cortex of the system that receives most of their input from the primary sensory cortex of that system or from other areas of secondary sensory cortex of the same system.

The association cortex is any area of the cortex that receives input from more than one sensory system. It is via areas of secondary sensory cortex is which most input of areas of association cortex comes from.
