The Adventures of Bobby Orde Stewart Edward White, 2020-03-31 At nine o'clock one morning Bobby Orde following an agreement with his father walked sedately to the Proper Place where he kept his cap and coat and other belongings The Proper Place was a small dark closet under the angle of the stairs He called it the Proper Place just as he called his friend Clifford Fuller or the saw mill town in which he lived Monrovia because he had always heard it called so At the door a beautiful black and white setter solemnly joined him Hullo Duke greeted Bobby The dog swept back and forth his magnificent feather tail and fell in behind his young master Bobby knew the way perfectly You went to the fire engine house and then to the left after the court house was Mr Proctor's and then all at once the town Father's office was in the nearest square brick block Bobby paused as he always did to look in the first store window In it was a weapon which he knew to be a Flobert Rifle It was something to be dreamed of with its beautiful blued steel octagon barrel its gleaming gold plated locks and its polished stock Bobby was just under ten years old but he could have told you all about that Flobert Rifle its weight the length of its barrel the number of grains of both powder and lead loaded in its various cartridges Among his books he possessed a catalogue that described Flobert Rifles and also Shotguns and Revolvers Bobby intoxicated himself with them Twice he had even seen his father's revolver and he knew where it was kept on the top shelf of the closet The very closet door gave him a thrill The Adventures of Bobby Orde (Classic Reprint) Stewart Edward White, 2015-09-27 Excerpt from The
