Parrish,2015-06-16 Excerpt from A Sword of the Old Frontier A Tale of Fort Chartres and Detroit It was a queer old town that Kaskaskia even then seventy years established a typical French village of the far frontier However I was destined to gain merely a glimpse of it before the sun sank for the message that had brought me thither was most urgent nor was I in any spirit to waste time with idle sight seeing There are few things that quicken action like an empty purse The whitewashed walls of the scattered houses built largely of rough hewn logs and but a single story in height alone served to direct my slow progress along the narrow irregularity of street As I turned into the more deserted lane leading southward even this uncertain guidance failed and I was compelled to grope through the blackness like a blind man my sole assistance that single faint beam of light far ahead It was a rarely black night the sky heavily overcast with clouds threatening rain the little hamlet sunk into strange quietude for so early an hour fatigued doubtless by its late fete To my left a number of dogs barked noisily while close upon my right could be distinguished the musical ripple of the great river as its waters lazily lapped the shore Nowhere was there sight or sound of human presence It may have been no more than a hundred yards from the cross roads to the threshold of the Bon Vin but even a hundred yards in such darkness along a path littered with roots and stones is no small journey About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work Forgotten Books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy In rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition We do however repair the vast majority of
