

The poetry of okot p'bitek

Okot p'Bitek in his Song of Lawino, Song of Ocol, Song of Prisoner, and Song of Malaya, makes a definite impression on modern African poetry. In all these poems, (except Song of Ocol to some extent), he makes use of oral tradition as a basic foundation or launching pad. p'Bitek himself, justifies this approach which he says:

... the vast majority of our people in the countryside have a full-blooded literary culture so deep, so vivid and alive that for the moment the very little written stuff appears almost irrelevant (quoted in Roscoe, 10)

What are p'Bitek's concerns in these "Songs", especially Song of Lawino? It is to make Africans aware of the richness and diversity of their African heritage. By this self-imposed crusade, he hopes to make meaning out of African traditions to modern-day Africans hemmed in on all sides by the destabilizing effects of modern western-oriented lifestyles. Commenting on this perspective, Roscoe (32) says:

Okot's whole career as poet... singer... has been concerned with the problem of making tradition meaningful to modernity and avoiding Western solutions to African problems.

From this preliminary survey of critical commentary we go into p'Bitek's actual works, beginning with Song of Lawino and Song of Ocol.

Song of Lawino depicts a heroine who laments the rejection of African tradition for western ways by the educated elite. By using the song style, the poem is not just a lament, but a series of songs meant to celebrate African culture. Cook (231) implies this trend when he says that

Lawino's

Urge (is) to celebrate in (her) own right the positive qualities of a threatened tradition .

Celebration in poetry is an aspect of African traditional oral culture. Lewis Nkosi confirms this when he asserts

... In this community the poet or the artist in general is there to "celebrate" his own or his society's sense of being ... and not there to subvert its social values or moral order (quoted in Cook, 231).

What are the African values that Lawino celebrates? These are: African aesthetics (or beauty), African concepts of religion, death, education and medicine, among others. These are contrasted with their European counterparts, and the verdict is that the former are superior. For these reasons, the poet-persona keeps repeating the refrain "Let no one uproot the pumpkin from the old homestead" – meaning that one's traditional culture should not be destroyed or abandoned recklessly. The "pumpkin" and the "homestead" are symbolic of African traditional culture.

Lawino, who also symbolizes African tradition, adopts as the butt of her attacks, her husband Ocol. Ocol is symbolic of the modern educated African, who has adopted wholesale, European cultural and mental attitudes. Ocol is artistically presented as rejecting African tradition, when Lawino says in the opening lines:
