Mimbres Art

Most of the drawings published by Fewkes are of Mimbres Classic paintings (Style III in Scott's terminology), dating from the early 1000s to about 1150. A very few, reproduced on these pages, (1923: figs. 9, 10; 1924: figs. 34, 45, 47) appear to be late Mimbres Boldface pictures of the tenth century (Style II). No ninth century early Boldface paintings (Style I) are shown. Fewkes could hardly have had a clear idea about either chronology or the stylistic history of Mimbres art. He was limited, first, by the virtual absence in his sample of early examples that might have suggested developmental sequences to him; second, by the general absence of contextual information about most of the pictures; and third, by the total absence of a comprehensive theory concerning the culture history of the region or the people who had made the art.
