

In Apartment One at 1133 South Cooper, a first floor apartment whose bedroom windows are visible from the swimming pool, an apartment past which people have been walking at intervals all day, a man and a woman lie dead. They have been murdered. Roy Dumas's body, hands and feet strapped together, is on a twin bed under a window at the corner of the building. The body of his wife is on a bed in another corner room. On the street, amidst of all the tranquil activity around them, they have been strangled. They lie in their silent rooms late afternoon and the evening and finally in the morning their bodies stiffen and grow cold.
