

The Terrace House by Merchant Builders

Architect: Thomas C. Stone, A.R.A.I.A.

The Terrace House can be built with either a flat roof or a gabled roof. The gabled roof gives the house a different, comfortable and domestic external look. It also adds a roof and spatial drama to the interior. The high vaulted timber ceiling, following the slope of the roof, develops a delightful sense of space and openness. The flat roof Terrace House is compact, balanced, and beautifully integrated. It is a house which hugs the ground and is at home in almost any surrounding. The elongated plan is very flexible. It can fit neatly along narrow suburban blocks or span wider frontages. The house can be built on flat or sloping rising blocks. A wooden deck above the ground can replace the terrace area when the land falls steeply. The house can be easily extended to 3000 sqm modules. Although the house is planned to provide an effective separation between the children and adult areas, there is a spacious open feeling in all the living areas.
