

The Austral Islands south of Tahiti - Rapa, Rurutu and Raiatea hold some interesting clues. A Rurutu man, Raiatea stone carvings compared to similar carvings in St. Augustine, Columbia.

We seem to be getting a long way from the Polynesian story, but are we? Maori history from New Zealand describes their origin was from India, as we see from the following extract from an article recorded from Maori elders by Elsdon Best (1856 -1931) ;

Maori tradition tells us that their ancestors in times long passed away, 161 generations ago - (approximately 1500B.C. - a time of turmoil in India), migrated from a hot country named Irihia (Irihia is an ancient name for India). The cause of exodus, from this original homeland was a disastrous war with a dark-skinned folk, in which great numbers were slain. The principle food supply on the voyage was the sapless small seed named ari - the Indian word for rice. They crossed the oceans (Indian Ocean and Atlantic), to sojourn in two lands, named Tarwhiti-roa (distant long land - Central America) and Tarwhiti-mui (distant big land - Peru - no voyage between these two lands), after which they entered the isles of Polynesia.

Is it mere coincidence that the Maori mention a departure from India at the same time when the Harappa civilization was destroyed? Where did the name Maori come from? According to the Rig Veda, the Maurya dynasties of India began in 1500BC. Is this, another mere coincidence? This legend mentions a war with a dark skinned folk (the Hindu Dravidians). This can only mean the Maori ancestors were pale skinned. The Urukchu and Chirapa people of Peru and the Pacific were all red heads. 'They crossed the oceans', means they crossed more than one ocean. An epic voyage such as this must have been done with the prevailing wind via a known trade route. Assuming their destination was Central America, their route would have been in summer around 'The Cape of Good Hope' and across the Atlantic utilizing the Southern Equatorial current, and S.E. Trade winds, making landfall along the northern coast of South America. Interestingly Bronze Age Indian genes are common amongst Venezuelans. According to the Rig Veda, when Harappa was destroyed, many people sailed to Tamil Nadu where a similar culture existed. Others chose to leave India completely and go in search of a new homeland.
