Mitigating Carbon Emissions and Haze in Southeast Asia's Peatlands: Opportunities and Challenges in Integrating Policy and Governance Helena Varkkey,Matthew Ashfold,Gusti Anshari,Alex M. Lechner,2024-09-27 Peatland ecosystems in Southeast Asia are globally important as carbon sinks rich in terrestrial and aquatic fauna and flora and important sources of livelihood for local communities However agribusiness driven land use change and drainage cause peatland degradation and peat fires which generate haze air pollution and lead to significant economic losses and health impacts Disturbed peatlands also become substantial sources of greenhouse gas GHG emissions While the problems of haze and climate change are connected through peatlands these issues have been treated largely separately in policy and governance In this article we provide an overview of Southeast Asian peatlands assessing opportunities and challenges for greater integration of policy and governance in addressing haze climate change and other sustainability dimensions We focus on Indonesia and Malaysia the Southeast Asian countries with the largest peatland areas We summarize key developments along with evidence indicating that peatlands represent a large proportion of national GHG emissions in both Indonesia and Malaysia Further we trace the evolution of peatland policies at the national and regional levels from focusing on conservation to addressing fire and haze issues reflecting their complex relationship with national development and the corporate sector Next we highlight important and yet unrealized opportunities to better integrate carbon emissions reduction alongside fire and haze in the implementation of peatland Nature based Solutions NbS which are interventions to protect sustainably manage or restore nature Emerging financial and market instruments provide one such opportunity Additionally the creation of an enabling governance environment through peatland community participation presents an opportunity to improve the effectiveness of NbS across multiple sustainability dimensions We found that for these two key countries the most recent government reported peatland emissions appear somewhat lower than is suggested by academic studies for Indonesia and substantially lower in the case of Malaysia Further we emphasize the complex challenge of integrating policies across multiple scales and issues with international regional and national actors and in multiple industries all active in peatland governance Economic Outlook for Southeast Asia, China and India 2017 Addressing Energy Challenges OECD,2017-01-23 The Economic Outlook for Southeast Asia China and India is a bi annual publication on regional economic growth development and regional integration in Emerging Asia It focuses on the economic conditions of Association of Southeast Asian Nations ASEAN member countries Brunei Darussalam
