farmsteads trampled wheat fields orchards stripped and broken till the still woods received him and he fell face down on the unmutilated earth He had no wish to go back His longing was to live hidden from life Up the hillside he found a hollow in the rock and built before it a porch of boughs bound together with withies He fed on nuts and roots and on trout which he caught with his hands under the stones in the stream He had always been a quiet boy liking to sit at his mother s feet and watch the flowers grow on her embroidery frame while the chaplain read aloud the histories of the Desert Fathers from a great silver clasped volume He would rather have been bred a clerk and scholar than a knight s son and his happiest moments were when he served mass for the chaplain in the early morning and felt his heart flutter up and up like a lark up and up till it was lost in infinite space and brightness Almost as happy were the hours when he sat beside the foreign painter who came over the mountains to paint the chapel and under whose brush celestial faces grew out of the rough wall as if he had sown some magic seed which flowered while you watched it
