Earth Memories Llewelyn Powys, 2019-01-13 Earth Memories is a wonderful collection of essays by the English writer Llewelyn Powys These love letters to the English Countryside manifest throughout great depth of nature lore and observation hand in hand with the author s own personal pagan creed and commentary on places people and things This edition which was first published in 1938 includes an Introduction by the American literary critic and Pulitzer Prize winning author Van Wyck

Brooks Wherever Llewelyn Powys has lived his mind has always turned towards England the homeland that haunts him like a passion Under the stars in the African jungle poring over Robert Burton whose rhythms have left long traces in his style a style that is often archaic and always rare in texture he dreamed of English gardens In New York in the clattering streets he would see the cuckoo perched singing on the top of Sandsfoot Castle He can always regain serenity he says in one of his essays by thinking of the playground of his childhood the pear trees of Montacute Vicarage High as his fever may be the memory of this enchanted ground quiets his pulse in a moment and his pictures of England suggest the eye of the convalescent as if the world had been reborn for him They are full of an all but miraculous freshness Van Wyck Brooks
