A MINING TOWN ON THE HUDSON

This stretch of the Hudson River valley was occupied by a growing mining community, following the discovery of rich iron ore in 1826, and continuing until 1858.

Mining operations ceased and the village was abandoned due to a series of calamities: the death of financial backer Archibald McTear, a downturn in the global economy, and devastating floods that washed out the dams.

The building before you, the McNaughton Cottage, is the only wood frame structure that remains from the iron mining era.

BIRDSEYE VIEW c1854

Much of the forest in the valley under was cleared and burned for charcoal and firewood, and used for building material. The Hudson was dammed for power, and a bustling community was born from the wilderness.

SELF-RELIANCE vs. DEPENDENCE

There was no easy access to this remote location from settled areas in the Champlain Valley to the west; the community had to be self-sufficient, but the people and the industry were also dependent on getting critical supplies from the east and exporting the iron that was their lifeline. The difficult connection to eastern markets was one of the major reasons the entire operation was abandoned.

SECOND GENERATION GHOST TOWN

All the iron for buildings, except the McNaughton Cottage, has disappeared by the late 1900s. The village was a first-order iron town, with the iron ore being mined in the Adirondac region.
