Strategic Appraisal 1997:

Strategic Appraisal 1997: Strategy and Defense Planning for the 21st Century, 1997 For U S defense planners these are the best of times and the worst of times On the one hand with the collapse of our erstwhile Cold War adversary basic questions of national security strategy are once again in play In light of this change there has never been greater scope for reviewing U S national objectives and threats to them creatively weighing these against resources available and crafting a strategy suitable to new and emerging conditions At the same time extraordinary developments emerging from the technology base are opening up possibilities for radically new ways of conducting military operations Taken together these trends should spark a wide ranging set of debates about the best way for this nation to go about protecting and advancing its interests in the future the roles that military power should play in U S national security strategy and the appropriate size and mix of U S military forces Yet to date these debates have seemed constricted if not stillborn Perhaps one reason for this is that Americans have not yet embraced a broad set of guiding objectives for U S foreign policy and security strategy Too the shrinking of the defense budget poses a seemingly endless set of management challenges as we try to downsize the defense establishment without severely disrupting the activities of commanders and forces in the field Resource constraints have also heightened sensitivities so that at the level of military force structure and program analysis it is difficult to escape the feeling that every position is evaluated first through the lens of Service parochialism

Strategic Appraisal Zalmay Khalilzad, Jeremy Shapiro, 2002-07-31 Change in international relations in technology and in society as a whole has become the idiom of our age One example of these changes has been an increasing recognition of the value of air and space assets for handling nearly every contingency from disaster relief to war and consequently increasing demand for such assets. These developments have created both challenges and opportunities for the U S Air Force. This the fourth volume in the Strategic Appraisal series draws on the expertise of researchers from across RAND to explore both the challenges and opportunities that the U S Air Force faces as it strives to support the nation's interests in a challenging technological and security environment. Contributors examine the changing roles of air and space forces in U S national security strategy, the implications of new systems and technologies for military operations and the role of nuclear weapons in U S security strategy. Contributors also discuss the status of major modernization efforts within the Air Force and the bill of health of the Air Force as measured by its readiness to undertake its missions both today and in the future. Strategic Environmental Assessment Barry Sadler, 2000 U.S. Army War College Guide to Strategy ,

Russian Strategic Modernization N. N. Sokov, 2000 This invaluable study provides a unique insider's view of the history of Soviet and Russian policy on nuclear weapons modernization and charts the future evolution of the Russian strategic arsenal. Using information that has only recently become available and introducing new previously unknown data, Sokov concludes that the most important force behind the evolution of the Soviet and Russian strategic arsenal was the military itself which sought to increase strategic stability by enhancing the survivability of weapons systems. The highly destabilizing posture of the 1970s and 1980s, as he argues, is in a sense accidental, resulting from the failure of several R D programs and specific features of the Soviet decisionmaking mechanism. The author demonstrates that the role of such factors as the economic crisis, U S modernization programs and general Russian foreign policy goals has been exaggerated by Western analysts. No matter how hard pressed, Russia will hold to its current plans, Sokov argues. At the same time, the military will be unlikely to engage in a new arms buildup even if the economic situation improves or a nationalist government comes to power. Instead, stability will be sought through better quality of weapons at progressively lower levels. Introducing a wealth of new information on Soviet and Russian national security policymaking, the author explores in meticulous detail such key issues as decisions on weapons development, arms control negotiations and the handling of the Soviet nuclear arsenal after the breakup of the Soviet Union. The reader will be able to follow the debates and intrigues between military planners, diplomats and weapons designers as they clashed over the choice of acquisition programs and negotiating positions. With its combination of informed analysis and use of new documentation, this work will be invaluable for all concerned with U S Russian strategic relations. A Strategic Appraisal of Nigeria's Export Promotion Policy Adesina A. Strategic Analysis Andrea Beretta Zanoni, 2011-08-25 In the last few years, competition has become increasingly more complex, variable and dynamic, as can be seen in phenomena like globalization and technological acceleration. To cope with the dynamism and uncertainty of competition, enterprises need capabilities that enable them to respond to competition as well as to improve their analytical skills and knowledge in order to better manage new strategic projects. Strategic analysis
