Hanson,Tim Hoheisel,2002 The picturesque gently rolling hills of northeastern South Dakota were formed by glaciers 20 000 years ago A French cartographer first mapped the area in 1838 calling it Coteau des Prairies

French for Hills of the Prairies On these hills sits Codington County which got its name from the Reverend G S Codington a traveling preacher based in Watertown On August 7 1878 Kampeska was named the first county seat At the same time railroad lines were extended from Minnesota into South Dakota leading to a great influx of population known as the Great Dakota Boom The rails only went as far as the Big Sioux River which was east of Kampeska so by the end of the year the entire town up and moved to meet the railroad With its new location came a new name Watertown An influx of German and Norwegian settlers in the early 1900s brought Codington County close to its current population of over 25 000 Selected

Eli Paul,2012-09-13 In previous accounts the U S Army s first clashes with the powerful Sioux tribe appear as a set of irrational events with a cast of improbable characters a Mormon cow a brash lieutenant a drunken interpreter an unfortunate Brul chief and an incorrigible army commander R Eli Paul shows instead that the events that precipitated General William Harney s attack on Chief Little Thunder s Brul village foreshadowed the entire history of conflict between the United States and the Lakota people Today Blue Water Creek is merely one of many modest streams coursing through Sioux country The conflicts along its margins have been overshadowed by later more spectacular confrontations including the Great Sioux War and George Custer's untimely demise along another modest stream. The Blue Water legacy has gone largely underappreciated until now. Blue Water Creek and the First Sioux War 1854-1856 provides a thorough and objective narrative using a wealth of eyewitness accounts to reveal the significance of Blue Water Creek in Lakota and U.S. history.
