Human Nature And Suffering Paul Gilbert, 2013-10-23 This volume explores the implications of humans as evolved social animals. Gilbert suggests that evolution has given rise to a varied set of social competencies which form the basis of our personal knowledge and understanding. These competencies are classified as a Care eliciting, b Care giving, c Co-operating, and d Competing. Each of these are seen as core schemata or archetypal potentials around which knowledge is built and from which our propensity for suffering flows. For example, our predisposition to think of ourselves as superior or inferior to others comes from innate competencies which evolve from dominance and social ranking. Gilbert shows how primitive competencies become modified by experience and what happens when this modification is unsatisfactory, for example leading to preoccupations with fantasy and behaviour which is dominance and power focused. Throughout the text, Gilbert shows how two psychological systems derived from ethological and experimental work, labelled the defense and safety system, dominate the unfolding and integration of human mental life. In the last chapter, these varied themes are brought together to indicate how the social construction of self arises from the organization of knowledge encoded within the four competencies. Gilbert highlights how cultural factors may modify and activate many of our more primitive competencies, leading not only to pathology/proneness but also to behaviours that are collectively survival threatening.

Unfree Associations Douglas Kirsner, 2009 This is the most thorough, revealing, and illuminating account of the inner workings of psychoanalytic institutions that has ever been written. It comprises ground-breaking, in-depth, recent political histories of the four leading psychoanalytic institutes in the United States: New York, Boston, Chicago, and Los Angeles, based on the author's extensive field work. Kirsner also provides dramatic insights into what psychoanalysts and their institutions have contributed to what has gone wrong with psychoanalysis. The result is a fascinating series of portraits of these institutes, their organizations, their cultures, their ways of mediating conflict, and how they have survived. In addition to archival research, the book is built on scores of interviews with prominent psychoanalysts who were often protagonists in the stories of their institutes. Many themes emerge in Kirsner's gripping yet scholarly accounts. Most importantly, he demonstrates that issues surrounding the right to train are central to psychoanalytic disputes Unfree Associations examines the problems of psychoanalysis a humanistic discipline that has been touted as a science on the model of the natural sciences but has been organized institutionally as a religion Interest in this book should not be confined to psychoanalysts It is a rich set of case studies in the vicissitudes of group relations with the ironic twist that the members of these organizations profess to have special insight into human nature and how people get along with one another *The Marpingen Apparatus.
