ABSTRACT

The traditional resource use structure in Himalaya has transformed considerably during the recent past, mainly owing to the growth of population and the resultant increased demand of natural resources in the region. This transformation in resource use practices is particularly significant in the densely populated tracts of Himalaya. As a result, cultivated land, forests, pastures and rangelands have been deteriorated and depleted steadily and significantly leading to their conversion into degraded and non-productive lands. These rapid land use changes have not only disrupted the fragile ecological equilibrium in the mountains through indiscriminate deforestation, degradation of land resources and disruption of the hydrological cycle, but also have significant and irreversible adverse impacts on the rural economy, society, livelihood and life quality of mountain communities. It has been observed that the agricultural production has declined, water sources are drying up fast due to decreased ground water recharge and a large number of villages are facing enormous deficit of critical resources, such as food, fodder, firewood and water, mainly due to unabated deforestation. As a result, the rural people, particularly the women, have to travel considerably long distances to collect fodder and firewood and to fetching water. It is therefore highly imperative to evolve a comprehensive and integrated land use framework for the conservation of the biophysical environment and sustainable development of natural resources in Himalaya. The land use policy would help local communities in making use of their natural resources scientifically and judiciously, and thus help in the conservation of the biophysical environment and in the increasing of the productivity of natural resources. The study indicates that conservation of forests and other critical natural resources through community participation, generation of alternative means of livelihood, and employment in rural areas can help increase rural income as well as restore ecosystem services.

Key words: subsistence agriculture, population growth, resource use pattern, urbanization, deforestation, hydrological disruptions, resource deficit, integrated land use framework

1. Introduction

Himalaya represents one of the tectonically unstable, ecologically fragile, economically underdeveloped and the most densely populated mountain ecosystems on the planet. The continuous uplift has led these mountain ranges to be highly vulnerable to large-scale tectonic movements, landslides, and to the processes of surface removal (Vaidya, 1985). The nature of the terrain imposes severe limitations on the scale of productive activities as well as on the efficiency of infrastructural facilities in the region. As a result, survival at the subsistence level is the order and the biomass based subsistence agriculture constitutes the main source of rural livelihood (Mukhani, 1996). More than 75 per cent of regional population is solely dependent on this traditional agro-ecosystem even though the availability of arable land is severely limited and the productivity is considerably poor (Tiwari and Joshi, 2005). This traditional agricultural system in the region is Cosmopolitical Ecologies Across Asia Riamsara Kuyakanon, Hildegard Diemberger, David Sneath, 2021-11-25 Cosmopolitical Ecologies Across Asia offers a unique insight into the non-human and spiritual dimensions of environmental management in a changing world. This volume presents a comparative place-based exploration of landscapes across Asia and the entities, practices and knowledges that inhabit them. Rather than treating sacred mountains, terrains and water sources as self-contained esoteric religious phenomena, the authors consider them within critical cosmopolitical ecologies framings in which non-human entities are engaged as actors in the socio-political arena. The chapters include case studies of healing springs recognized by governments and sacred mountains that are addressed by heads of states and Communist Party cadres or that speak to the faithful through spirit mediums in a politics of re-enchantment. Contributors explore the diverse ways in which non-human entities such as forest spirits, reindeer mountains and Buddhist Masters of the Land are engaged by humans to navigate environmental change and address a range of ecological threats from large-scale mining to climate change. Cosmopolitical ecologies approaches encompass the healing power of topography as well as transformative intimacies with other than human beings such as sparrows within an Islamic eco-theological poetic setting. In this light, the book observes dynamic and creative processes of cosmological innovation including the repurposing of ritual to address challenges such as the Covid-19 epidemic. This book will be of great interest to students and scholars of environment and society across disciplinary perspectives in general and to anthropologists, human geographers, political ecologists, indigenous studies, area studies, environmental sciences and environmental humanities.

Community-based Biodiversity Conservation in the Himalayas Yogesh Gokhale, Ajeet K. Negi, 2011-01-01 Conservation of biodiversity by local communities has been part of the social system in the Himalayas. A variety of ecosystems are conserved traditionally by local communities. These communities are fully aware of the relationship between protecting the nature and getting ecosystem goods and services. The van panchayat system in Uttarakhand and sacred natural sites all over the Himalayas suggest a mix of the institutions in the region. Globally, community conserved areas (CCAs) are gaining importance. Biodiversity Heritage Sites, Community Reserves, and Conservation Reserves are the new institutional legal provisions that recognize the efforts of local communities in biodiversity conservation in India. The present volume highlights the importance of the existing systems in terms of their role in biodiversity conservation with community participation and suggests ways to enhance community-based biodiversity conservation in light of the emerging policy provisions. It would serve as an important reference for a wide range of stakeholders from policy makers to environmentalists, biodiversity experts, development practitioners, academicians, and researchers.

Himalayan Trade Oliver Scott, 2025-03-20 Himalayan Trade explores the vibrant exchange of goods, ideas, and culture that flourished for centuries between India, Tibet, and China. It delves into the complex network of trade routes crisscrossing the Himalayas, revealing how these pathways facilitated not only the movement of commodities like silk, salt, and spices but also spurred significant cultural and political transformations. The book highlights how economic interdependence shaped regional identities, demonstrating that trade was more than just commerce; it was a catalyst for societal change. The approach is interdisciplinary, drawing from history, anthropology, and economics to provide a well-rounded view. For instance, the book examines how the rise and fall of empires directly impacted trade regulations and routes, akin to how a change in government policies can alter modern trade agreements. The study also looks at how communities adapted socially and culturally to new ideas and goods. The book progresses systematically, starting with the geographical and historical context, then moves on to the major commodities traded and their economic impact. It culminates with an analysis of the geopolitical forces at play and the eventual decline of traditional routes due to modern globalization. This comprehensive approach makes Himalayan Trade a valuable resource for anyone interested in world history, economic history, and the cultural dynamics of the Himalayas.

Environmental Sustainability from the Himalayas to the Oceans Shikui Dong, Jayanta Bandyopadhyay, Sanjay Chaturvedi, 2017-01-23 The book is written in the backdrop of the environmental impacts of and future requirements from the natural environment for rapid economic growth that has characterized recent economic history of China and India, especially over the past few decades.
