Human Approach to Technology Enhanced Learning

Assessors - Options - Perspectives

Processes:

1. Mixed age classrooms, with classrooms for children aged 7½ to 11½ years old.
2. Student choice of activity from within a prescribed range of options.
3. Uninterrupted blocks of work time.
4. A 'Constructivist' or 'Discovery' model, where students learn concepts from enquiry with materials, rather than by direct instruction.

Teacher takes less direct, authoritative role and becomes - the provider of self-judgment in assessment.

An educational instrument, guided by passion and principle, to help students develop consciousness of themselves, recognise substantial tendencies, and connect knowledge to power and the ability to take constructive action.

Learn naturally if given the freedom to follow own interests and a rich environment of resources.

School is demanding to education. This goal is worthy because to confront teaching with learning, grade advancement with education, a diploma with competence, and finally with the ability to use something well.

Optimal learning demands that students receive instruction related to their learning styles.

Knowledge is continuously gained through both personal and environmental experiences. The learner must:

1. be able to reflect on the experience;
2. use analytical skills to conceptualize the experience; and
3. make decisions and solve problems to use the ideas gained from the experience.

Refining the goal of learning activity in the light of experience or possibly even reject the goal. Single-loop learning is the repeated attempt at the same problem, with no variation of method and without ever questioning the goal.

A characteristic of an adaptive organization that is able to sense changes in signals from its environment and react accordingly.

An organization is created and defined by communication, coordination, or "the organization" and the organization exists because communication takes place.

A laboratory and specific framework that offers a scientific theory to explain how interactions lead to "learning".

Learning is a social process whereby knowledge is constructed and is situated in a specific context and embedded within a particular social and physical environment.

Groups of people who share a concern or a passion for something they do and want how to do it better as their shared purpose.

Education based on student self-regulation and empowerment and respect for the individual.

The process that occurs between a teacher and student that reflects direct experience with the learning environment and content.

Knowledge as mental representation, i.e. knowledge is not passively received either through the senses or by way of communication. i.e. knowledge is actively built up by the learning subject. i.e. the function of experience is adaptive, or the biological sense of the term, leading towards fit or viability. i.e. cognition serves the subject's organization of the experiential world, not the discovery of an objective ontological reality.

The learner is not a passive recipient of knowledge but that knowledge is constructed by the learner.

Groups construct knowledge for one another, collaboratively creating a social culture of shared artifacts with shared meanings.

Knowledge is distributed across a network of individuals in people and information - learning consists of the ability to construct and integrate those networks.

A human being develops cognitively from birth through five or six through four primary stages of development: sensorimotor (0-2), preoperational (2-7), concrete operations (7-11), and formal operations (11-15). Knowledge is constructed if new experiences into existing mental schema, accommodation changes mental schema.

The area of capabilities that learners can control with support from a teacher or peer.

The learning of new forms of activity as they are created, rather than the mastery of pre-existing, well-defined learning knowledge and skills.

Scaffolding is the support given during the learning process which is tailored to the needs of the student with the intention of helping the student achieve their learning goals.

Learners obtain knowledge by forming and testing hypotheses.

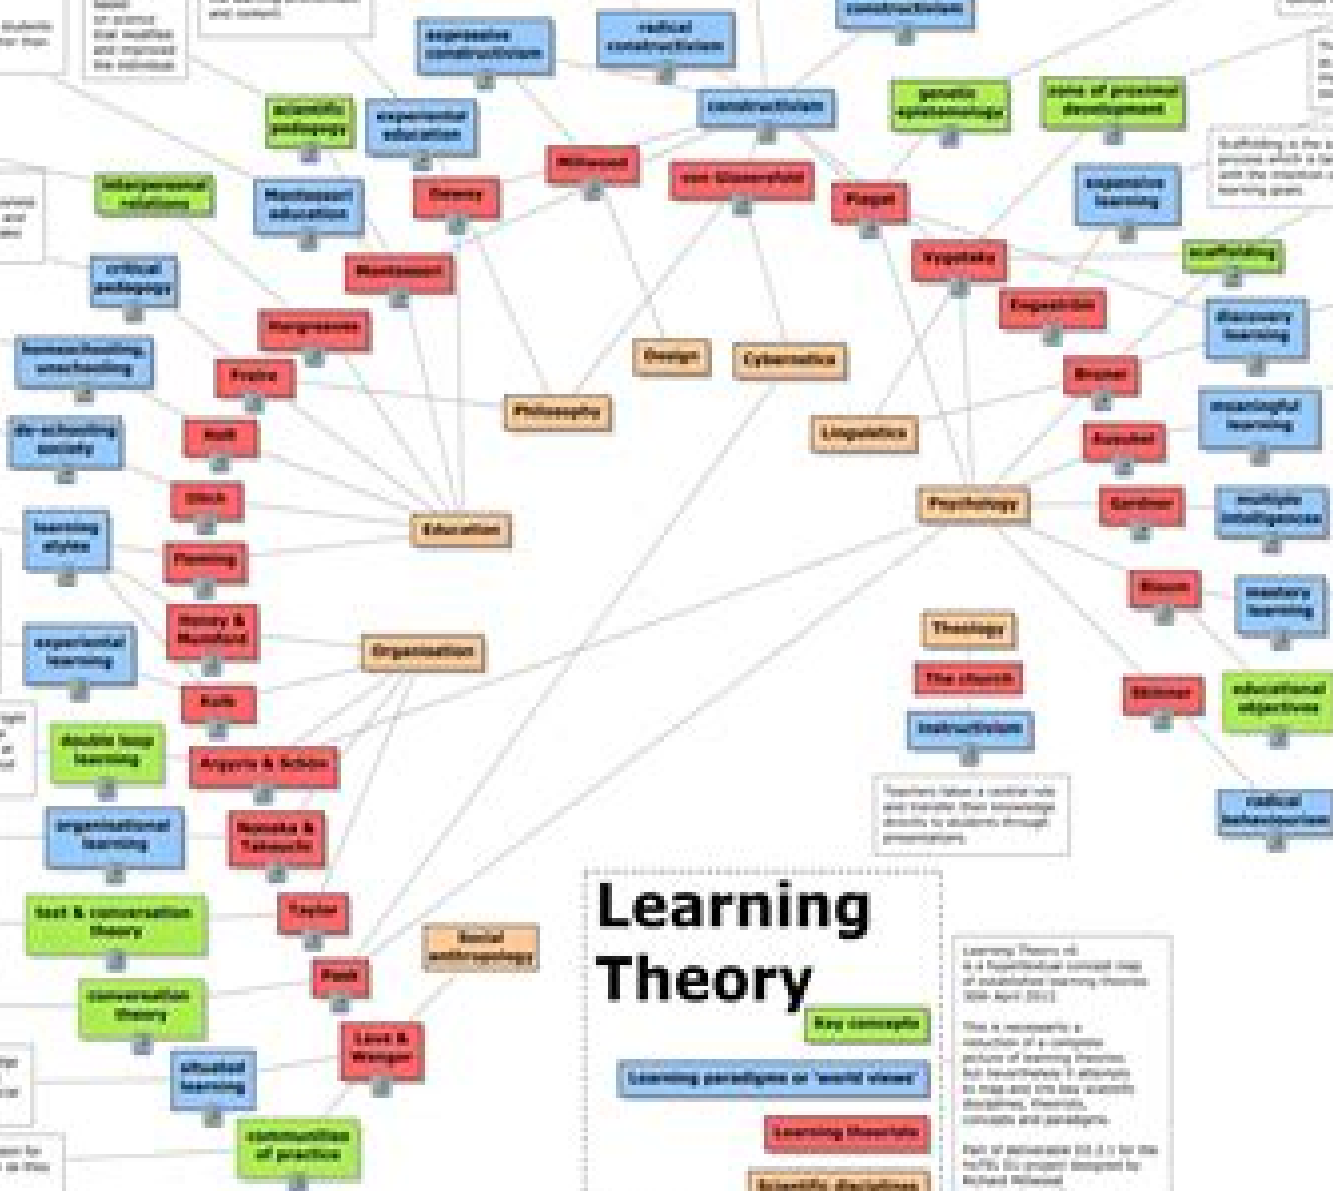

New knowledge to students is related with previous knowledge.

The least accurate efficient source of learning and instructing information, but these methods are relatively independent of one another - leading to multiple "intelligences" as opposed to a general intelligence factor affecting combined abilities.

In Mastery learning, "the students are helped to master each learning unit before proceeding to a more advanced learning unit".

Theories of learning describe that education will be students at three "domains": Cognitive, Affective, and Psychomotor learning. At the higher levels is dependent on achieving lower levels designed to enhance education to focus on all three domains, creating a broad holistic form of education.

Learning as a process of forming associations between stimuli in the environment and the corresponding responses of the individual. Reinforcement strengthens responses and weakens the likelihood of another occurrence when the stimulus is present again.
