

THE CHILDREN OF HERACLES

Scene: A temple of Zeus at Eleutherae, on the north-east coast of Attica. The front of the temple, on which old Pelops and the young sons of Heracles have taken refuge as suppliants.

SCENE I

Since long ago I've been a witness of what as human men mine the forest around here, while the sea below mind to manly men compares to make us his city and things men to deal with, good only to himself.

That I know from experience, not from I myself could have lived quietly in Argos, but then came and daily duty I was to see men who shared with Heracles in his many labours, while he was still with us.
And now that he dwells in heaven, I keep his children here under my wing and try to protect them — though meeting persecution myself.
For when their father labours earth and heaven, Everywhere he goes, as first he told me all: but we managed, for we have him our city but kept our lives, for a while I mean to do, leaving from one man's hands to another's.

For, sitting at our altar now when I myself now sit to rest, and further nothing we can whatever he found we'll settle ourselves somewhere, he sent heralds to demand we be admitted and delivered from the land that I'd put out that Argos was no small city, as friend or foe, and that he himself was prosperous and successful.

And they, looking at the traditions on my part and at the children here, no small and without a father, they ended up giving respect to the stranger guest — no company has Heracles from their land.

For myself, I'm a fellow with the noble children, a fellow sufferer with these sufferings, but now I refuse to let go them, lest people might say,
"Look! Here the children's father's men are,
I have brought them, protecting them, even though he's a member of their family."

With no place of our own in all of Greece, yet we come to Eleutherae and its neighbouring lands,
