Noverr,1989     Good and Bad Sci-fi/Horror Movies of the 1950s Gary Koca,2017-09-22 The 1930s and early 1940s are considered by most film historians to be the golden era of black and white horror films and Universal Studios was the main studio to take advantage of the public s interest in this film genre Movies such as Frankenstein and its even better sequel The Bride of Frankenstein Dracula The Mummy The Invisible Man The Werewolf of London and my own personal favorite The Wolfman with Lon Chaney Jr were all terrific films and spawned a bunch of sequels like Frankenstein Meets the Wolf Man House of Frankenstein House of Dracula and even Abbott and Costello Meet Frankenstein But by the early 1940s these make believe monsters were replaced by real ones Hitler and Nazi Germany as well as the other Axis powers Italy and Japan And after World War II ended the public was interested in different kinds of films war films comedies and movies that dealt with real life problems like readjustment to civilian life alcoholism and life in prison just to name a few At the same time no sooner was World War II brought to a close in August of 1945 after the dropping of the atomic bombs in Hiroshima and Nagasaki Japan that an all out nuclear weapons race commenced between the two newly emerging superpowers the United States and Russia Between 1946 and 1949 the United States conducted six nuclear tests and the Soviet Union conducted its first test in August of 1949 At the outset neither the U S nor the Soviet Union had many nuclear weapons to spare but that changed dramatically in the early 1950s In January of 1951 the United States established a dedicated test site in Nevada and was also using a site in the Marshall Islands in the Pacific Ocean for extensive nuclear testing The Soviet Union began similar testing in Kazakhstan An atmosphere of fear and suspicion between the two countries led the feeding frenzy to build more powerful and sophisticated bombs with the result that during the 1950s new hydrogen bomb designs were tested in the Pacific At the same time we began to look upward and wonder if we were the only planet in our galaxy or any other solar system that had intelligent life What if there were life on other planets beings who were advanced and either saw earth as a place to colonize or were worried about what our gaining sophistication in developing nuclear devices could do to their planets These thoughts were not lost on Hollywood film makers As a result in the early 1950s they began making films that centered on three themes 1 What effects did these bombs have on unearthing or even creating monsters that were either dormant for millions of years or never even existed 2 What other planets or solar systems could wreak havoc on earth 3 What monsters might we find as we explore previously unexplored areas of the earth This book is a look at some of those films and a few of those stars some good some really good and some just cheesy and god awful Remember I am calling this MY list of best and worst science fiction horror films of the 50s NOT the best and worst of that era If you have a movie that you believe should be included in this book that is certainly understandable NOTE I have purposely avoided Japanese monster movies of the 1950s in this book There are plenty of American and British films to cover without touching the Japanese films which were occasionally good but most often just awful Fifty Classic French Films, 1912-1982 Anthony Slide, 1987 Fifty Famous Films, 1915-1945 British Film Institute, National Film Archive (Great Britain), 1960 Invasions USA Michael Bliss, 2014 Out of more than 180 science fiction films produced in the United States between 1950 and 1959 twenty were concerned with the notion of an invasion Of these a select number used the invasions as metaphors of issues that were of importance to America at the time such as assaults upon individuality and marriage and debates about the supremacy of the human race The invasion may be real The Day the Earth Stood Still and War of the Worlds dreamed Invaders from Mars or the result of a mental breakdown as seems to be the case in Invasion of the Body Snatchers Real or not all of these massive disturbances to the status quo convey the same anxiety In the 1950s many Americans felt that things in their world weren't quite right and this sense of unease was expressed in the country's art notably these films In Invasions USA The Essential Science Fiction Films of the 1950s Michael Bliss examines movies that stripped away the veneer of normality during a decade often portrayed as the last innocent period in American history From a boy's nightmares about his alien controlled parents and a young woman's fears that her fiancé has been replaced by an emotionless alien to an extraterrestrial visitor who comes to warn mankind about its self destructive ways the stories of these films offer a variety of messages both subtle and overt With detailed discussions and analyses of the films in question this book examines a unique group of movies with profound messages By exploring depictions of insecurities whether personal or political Bliss shows how science fiction films spoke to American audiences deeply troubled by their circumstances Invasions USA will appeal to science fiction buffs and film aficionados interested in this significant phenomenon in movie and cultural history ast innocent period in American history From a boy's nightmares about his alien controlled parents and a young woman's fears that her fiancé has been replaced by an emotionless alien to an extraterrestrial visitor who comes to warn mankind about its self destructive ways the stories of these films offer a variety of messages both
