

Media Review: The Lost Soul of Higher Education: Corporatization, the Assault on Academic Freedom, and the End of the American University

Schnecker, E. (2012). The lost soul of higher education: Corporatization, the assault on academic freedom, and the end of the American university. New York, NY: The New Press, 304 pp., ISBN 978-1-55598-400-7 ($17.95 hardcover).

Reviewed by Jerald P. Freeman, Northeastern State University and Tracy Florence, Randolph Maun College

Schnecker's The Lost Soul of Higher Education considers two major challenges facing the academy: (a) the continued attacks on academic freedom and the perception of the liberal academy and (b) the crucial financial considerations brought about by the current recession and the diminishing government support for higher education. Schnecker's training as a historian and life as a faculty member bring unique depth and perspective to her arguments against the attacks on academic freedom and the increasing use of corporate practices within higher education.

Schnecker argues that the evidence of the current higher education climate emanates from three major issues: (a) an increased emphasis on competition for research grants and publishing; (b) concentration of power at the top of the academic hierarchy accompanied by a move away from faculty governance; and (c) a "casualization of the academic labor force" with the increased
