

A Brief History
The County of Montgomery was organized in 1790 from parts of Prince George's and Anne Arundel Counties. It was named in honor of George Montgomerie, a Scottish nobleman and a friend of the American Revolution. The county's early history is marked by the establishment of the first settlement, Rockville, in 1791. The county's growth was rapid, and by 1800, it had become one of the most populous counties in Maryland. The county's economy was based on agriculture, and it was known for its production of wheat and corn. The county's history is also marked by the American Civil War, during which it was the site of several battles. The county's present-day boundaries were established in 1891, when it was divided into its current 18 municipalities.
