Air Force. Office of Air Force History, 1978 US Air Force Air Force History and Museums Program (U.S.), 2001 Generations of Chevrons: a History of the Enlisted Force Air Force Air Force History and Museums Program, 2019-09-02 Histories of the United States Air Force and its predecessor organizations have focused on pilots planes and the use of air power While certainly a large part of the service's history and heritage these studies do not tell the whole story In the last dozen years or so a number of people have begun a serious examination of the history of the enlisted members of the U S Air Force Just as it became clear that economic and business histories would not be complete without looking at rank and file workers so those studying USAF history found that a full picture demanded an inclusion of enlisted personnel These enlisted histories though still few in number nonetheless illuminate several important themes and trends in the history and heritage of the USAF enlisted force First enlisted airmen have always been seen and valued primarily for their high level of technical and/or occupational skills Whether serving as aircraft mechanics computer operators personnel clerks or military policemen airmen have always been among the most intelligent and highly trained enlisted individuals in the U S military Second the emphasis on skills and training has helped to promote a professionalization of the USAF enlisted force Third the Air Force has always prized an enlisted force with a high percentage of skilled professional career noncommissioned officers NCOs And finally over its long history the USAF enlisted force has become more diverse in terms of skills race and gender As an organization the U S Air Force has generally supported policies that promoted its ability to recruit train and retain an enlisted force matching the above characteristics The Air Force has not always matched its practices with its rhetoric concerning the enlisted force but overall the trend has been in the direction of emphasizing training education and professionalization Enlisted members particularly senior noncommissioned officers have played crucial roles in supporting the service s vision for its enlisted force Again and again they provided the day to day ground level leadership that held things together in the face of the many challenges confronting the service Through the ups and downs in the provision of pay housing and medical care the Korean and Vietnam Wars the integration of African Americans and women the transition to the all volunteer force and the end of the Cold War U S Air Force NCOs stepped up to the leadership challenges presented them They are a proud group with their own heroes schools professional organizations traditions and memorials As the Air Force looked to its enlisted personnel for crucial leadership in its first half century it will in all probability continue to rely on its enlisted leadership as it enters the twenty first century Encyclopedia of US Air Force Aircraft and Missile Systems: Post-World War II bombers, 1945-1973 Marcelle Size Knaack,1978
