

inappropriate statistical analysis done by the measurer or the researcher, errors may creep into the measurement.

(iii) Situation: Situational factors also contribute to errors in measurement. Any situation that puts unnecessary strain on the respondent, tends to introduce errors in measurement. An interview is one example of such a situation. Apart from this, if the person feels that the situation does not protect anonymity, it also introduces error in measurement.

(iv) Test instrument: Errors may be introduced in the measurement due to poor psychometric qualities of the test and defective measuring instrument. Psychological tests having poor reliability and validity may result in measurement errors.

To avoid the errors resulting from the above-mentioned sources, it is essential that the researcher should try to eliminate or neutralise these possible errors as far as possible.

TESTING AND ASSESSMENT

The terms testing and assessment are often confused. Therefore, it is essential that these two terms should be clearly distinguished. The basic goal of assessment is to evaluate a person in terms of current and future functioning. In the process of assessment, behaviours are classified into different categories measured against a normative standard. Tests, on the other hand, are used in assessment processes. However, not all assessment techniques are tests. In the strict sense, any assessment technique is called a test only when its procedure for administration, scoring and interpretation are standardized, there is a standardization sample and there is evidence for its reliability and validity. Many so-called tests can more appropriately be called as assessment devices because they don't meet the minimum requirements of the test.
