Taste & smell

Most of our special senses are chemoreception systems: gustation (taste) and olfaction (smell). The degree to which we respond to taste or smell depends on the nature of the stimulus and the nature of the receptor. Concentrations

Taste receptors vary depending on the concentration of the substance in a given solution or food. For low concentrations, taste is weak and salty substances may taste bitter.

Gustation

Gustation, the sense of taste, gives us information about the food and drink that we consume. Taste buds on the primary gustatory organ, the tongue, contain chemoreceptors called gustatory cells. These taste buds have four basic tastes: sweet, sour, salty, and bitter. A fifth taste, umami, is also present. The tongue is covered with papillae, or small bumps, which contain taste buds.

The taste bud

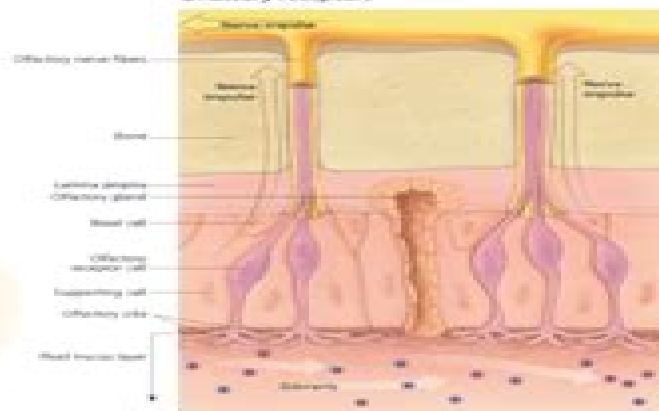

Each taste bud contains gustatory cells that project into the oral cavity. The gustatory cells are located in the taste bud, which is a small structure on the tongue. Olfaction

The sense of smell is called olfaction, or the detection of odors. Olfaction depends on specialized chemical receptors, or chemoreceptors, located within the olfactory epithelium. These receptors are designed to respond to small amounts of an odorant, a molecule that can be smelled. The brain interprets the input from these olfactory receptors to identify a particular odor. Humans can detect about 10,000 odors.

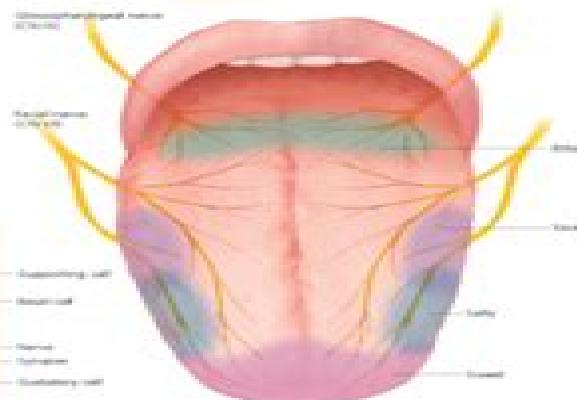

As air flows through the nose, the odors across the nasal cavity pass over the olfactory epithelium. Incoming odorant molecules can interact with the olfactory neurons, leading to the ability to detect odors by increasing the release of an impulse, which can activate the neurons of the brain.
