

The terms of trade – impact on household income

Many factors affect household incomes, but there is clear evidence of some increase in real household incomes above trend, as a result of lower import prices. These effects are however modest.

- Real household disposable income per capita (deflated by the personal consumption deflator) was about 4% above the post 1993 trend by September 2010
- This is due more to non-wage income components (such as property income) than to employee compensation
