

Glazing

Placing

If unglazed wares were being placed in the kiln, it was simply necessary to stack them one on top of another in such a way as to ensure an even firing throughout the stack. It did not matter if they touched each other, for, being dry, they would not stick together during the firing.

During the medieval period the potter had fired his jugs in short stacks, the glazed rim of one resting against the unglazed base of the next. By this rather crude method the pots tended to stick to one another where they touched, but unless the glaze was particularly tenacious they could be chipped apart fairly easily. A slightly improved method was to place three or four parting sherds (ie small pieces of broken pottery) between the glazed surfaces, thus quite simply reducing the scarring to a minimum. Both techniques sound crude, but they represent the normal practice for placing large jugs, cisterns, bread, or brewing pots in the kiln up to the early years of this century at least. As these wares were always strongly made and coarsely finished the occasional scar at the rim was hardly noticeable, but such methods were totally unsuited to the placing of the finer wares.

The cups and mugs introduced into this country in the late fifteenth and early sixteenth centuries demanded a much more sophisticated treatment, for their fine walls and delicate rims could not withstand either the weight of vertical stacking or the chipping off of the parting sherds. The alternative system developed or adopted by the cup-makers of this period involved the use of saggars—coarsely thrown cylindrical pots large enough to hold a single piece of fine ware each: a cup was placed on the floor of the kiln and a sagger inverted over the top of it, a second cup was then placed on top of the sagger and a second sagger placed over it, the process continuing until a tall stack of full saggars had been built up. Dr Plot in his 1686 Natural History of Staffordshire described how the pots

if they be loaded hollow wares, they [the potters] do not expose them to the naked fire, but put them in saggars, that is, in coarse mettall'd pots, made of marble (not clay) of divers formes according as their wares require . . . they put them in the saggars to keep them from sticking

Daniel Johnston Henry Glassie,2020-03-03

DANIEL JOHNSTON raised on a farm in Randolph County returned from Thailand with a new way to make monumental pots Back home in North Carolina he built a log shop and a wheel of a kiln for wood firing Then he set out to create beautiful pots grand in scale graceful in form and burned bright in a blend of ash and salt With mastery achieved and apprentices to teach Daniel Johnston turned his brain to massive installations First he made a hundred large jars and lined them along the rough road that runs past his shop and kiln Next he arranged curving clusters of big pots inside pine frames slatted like corn cribs to separate them from the slick interiors of four fine galleries in succession Then in concluding the second phase of his professional career Daniel Johnston built an open air installation on the grounds around the North Carolina Museum of Art where 178 handmade wood fired columns march across a slope in a straight line 350 feet in length that dips and lifts with the heave while the tops of the pots maintain a level horizon In 2000 when he was still Mark Hewitt's apprentice Daniel Johnston met Henry Glassie who has done fieldwork on ceramic traditions in the United States Brazil Italy Turkey Bangladesh China and Japan Over the years during a steady stream of intimate interviews Glassie gathered the understanding that enabled him to compose this portrait of Daniel Johnston a young artist who makes great pots in the eastern Piedmont of North Carolina

Caldecote Guy Beresford,2017-12-02 At just 132 hectares 325 acres the parish of Caldecote is one of the smallest parishes in Hertfordshire Today the settlement comprises the manor house until recently surrounded by a range of traditional farm buildings together with six labourer's cottages and the church To the north lies the site of the old rectory and the earthworks of a medieval settlement In 1973 the Department of Environment and the Deserted Medieval Village Research Group arranged a rescue excavation to examine the earthworks of the medieval village before they were levelled and ploughed Five crofts the old rectory site and much of the moated enclosure were investigated in one of the largest excavations ever conducted on a later medieval rural site in Britain Though the excavations did recover a Bronze Age beaker burial and small quantities of Roman and Iron Age pottery the medieval settlement at Caldecote was probably founded in the 10th century and by the time of the Domesday Survey there was a church a priest and nine villeins A moated site was added in the 13th century A century later Caldecote was granted to the abbots of the Benedictine monastery in St Albans at a time when there were seventeen householders Early in the second half of the 14th century the estate and demesne were subdivided into six farms each complete with a hall house and two or more barns Following the dissolution of the monastery in 1539 the manor was again held by an absentee lord and the farms continued to prosper However the late 16th and early 17th centuries for which there are several surviving wills and inventories saw their gradual abandonment After the desertion of Caldecote Marish in 1698 Caldecote was farmed as a single unit until 1970 when the estate was attached to that adjoining the manor of Newnham Of particular importance from Caldecote is the archaeological evidence for medieval peasant structures the development of the later medieval domestic plan and the structural transformation of post medieval period

Estate Landscapes : Design, Improvement and Power in the Post-medieval Landscape Jonathan Finch, Katherine Giles, 2007 An exciting study of the social and landscape phenomena of the Estate Landscape In recent years the post medieval landscape has attracted new interest from archaeologists historians and geographers concerned to understand the development of the historic environment One of the key structuring elements within these landscapes from the sixteenth century until the aftermath of the Second World War was undoubtedly the landed estate However it was not until the late nineteenth century that any systematic attempt to quantify the presence of these estates was undertaken prompted by the move to democratic reform and the persistent link between political power and landed wealth Yet the importance of the landed estate in structuring power social relationships and both agricultural and industrial production was not limited to the UK From the eighteenth century the link between the UK estates and patterns of landholding and exploitation in the colonies became increasingly complex and recursive This volume explores the relationships between the form and structure of British and Colonial estate landscapes their agricultural management and the political structures and social relationships they reproduced The articles

address themes as diverse as the creation and development of the agrarian landscape improvement ornamental landscapes and gardens and estate architecture Overall it highlights the wealth and diversity of existing scholarship and suggests new directions for post medieval archaeology in this dynamic area of research An Archaeological Study of Rural
