In the 1960s, De Beers, the world's largest diamond company, sent gem hunters to the area, but they came away empty-handed. It was a vast region to survey, and they overlooked something vital. A few years later, a team of Australian geologists with a tiny budget searched for even tinier mineral clues. Those clues led them to the earth's largest diamond deposit and the world's richest source of rare pink diamonds. Based on in-depth research and interviews, including with Alan King Jones, Bill Leslie, and the father of Australian diamonds, Ewen Tyler, Argyle: The Impossible Story of Australian Diamonds details the almost overwhelming challenges with realising a diamond mining venture in Australia, shows how these obstacles were overcome, and explores the mine's impact and legacy. Husserl, Heidegger and the Crisis of Philosophical Responsibility R.P. Buckley, 2012-12-06 The guiding dictum of phenomenology is to the things themselves This saying conveys a sense that the things the phenomena with which we are confronted and into which we seek some insight are not as immediately accessible as may be imagined Phenomena however are often hidden not by their distance from us but by their very proximity by the fact that they are taken for granted as being self evident and understood by all Even the most common everyday phenomena and the words used to describe them often reveal upon closer inspection a degree of complexity which had previously been unsuspected Upon interrogation that which had been taken to be self evident and widely understood shows itself otherwise assumed self evidence frequently masks unintelligibility and common understanding can be a sign of a lack of understanding One phenomenon which is extremely proximate in our times is the phenomenon of crisis To be sure one can hardly avoid the word these it abound in periodicals and newspapers but also in days Not only does the learned journals of medicine political science economics art and law barely does an edition appear without the discussion of a crisis of one sort or another within these respective fields One is tempted to remark along with Umberto Eco that crisis sells well l One is also inclined to be suspicious of the collective malaise of academics
