reputable local news media as well as the EU's imagery among the general public and the EU's vision among the national stakeholders and opinion leaders. Presenting the findings of this project, this book provides a systematic and detailed empirical insight into EU visibility in the public discourses of three Southeast Asian countries: Vietnam, Indonesia, and the Philippines. The so-called VIP data and analyses in this work cover 2008 and the first half of 2009, and it compares the findings with those published in Volume I, which examined the perceptions of the EU in China, Japan, Singapore, South Korea, and Thailand. EU through the Eyes of Asia is indispensable to policy makers and opinion leaders in the Asian and European milieus, putting forward vital recommendations to the EU, Asian governments, the media, and those managing relations between the two regions.
