

AIN'T NO HALF- STIPPIN'

The Half-Double Crochet (hdc) Stitch

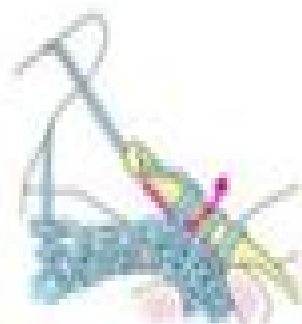

The half double crochet stitch seems to be a little confused. It starts out like a double crochet stitch, which you'll meet soon, but then returns to work its full height and finishes off like a single crochet stitch. It's taller than the single crochet stitch, so be sure that you easily remember:

1. To begin a row of half double crochet stitches, you'll need a starting chain of 2 stitches. To make the stitch, start by skipping your hook under both loops around your yarn, so you always do, so that you have a twisted loop when it comes. Then, if you're working into a face chain, insert your hook into the first loop from the back. If you're working into a row of stitches, insert your hook under both strands of the V of the first stitch of the row—it will be the last V after the loop on the back.

2. Wind your hook around the yarn again and pull a strand through.

3. You should have 4 loops of yarn on your hook. Wind your hook again, pulling the working strand of yarn, and pull it through all 4 of these loops. That's it, you're done! Continue on to the next stitch and the next row, all the way to the end of the row. Don't forget to keep inserting your hook under the top V of each stitch.

If you're working into a row of stitches, and the row ends a stitch into the turning chain of the previous row.

By making a few rows of half double crochet and see what you think about it. With all that working over, it's almost going that making single crochet stitches, but because each stitch is taller than single crochet, your fabric will gain faster—you don't have to make so many rows of stitches to achieve the same length. It also makes a looser, more flexible fabric than single crochet does, which makes it more appropriate for projects of draping. The stitches are shaped differently from single crochet, and you won't have such obvious ridges to help you count your stitches, but because of their height, the half double stitches are pretty easy to count when you're trying to measure your gauge.

The Double Crochet (dc) Stitch

A double crochet is a tall stitch, and it's one of the most common stitches you are likely to encounter in your crocheting career. It's simple to do, sturdy, and tall, so your work will grow quickly.

1. For double crochet, you'll want to make a starting chain of 3 stitches before starting each new row. To make the stitch, start by slipping your hook around your yarn so you have a twisted loop across the throat.

Then, insert your hook into a stitch. If you are working into a face chain, you'll want to start by inserting your hook into the 4th chain from the back—remember, your last 4 chains from the starting chain have. If you're working into a row of stitches, skip the stitch at the base of the turning chain. Instead, insert your hook under the two strands of the V on the top of the last stitch.

2. Once your hook is inserted, slip your hook around the yarn
