Abstract: Both cardiovascular disease (CVD) and social health carry high health and economic burdens. We undertook a systematic review to investigate the association between social isolation, low social support, and loneliness with health service utilisation and survival after a CVD event among people living in Australia and New Zealand. Four electronic databases were systematically searched for the period before June 2020. Two reviewers undertook the title/abstract screen. One reviewer undertook a full-text screen and data extraction. A second author checked data extraction. Of 756 records, 25 papers met our inclusion criteria. Included studies recruited 10–12,821 participants, aged 18–98 years, and the majority were males. Greater social support was consistently associated with better outcomes on four of the five themes (discharge destination, outpatient rehabilitation attendance, rehospitalisation and survival outcomes; no papers assessed the length of inpatient stay). Positive social health was consistently associated with better discharge designation to higher independent living. As partner status and living status did not align with social isolation and social support findings in this review, we recommend they not be used as social health proxies. Our systematic review demonstrates that social health is considered in cardiac care decisions and plays a role in how healthcare is being delivered (i.e., outpatient, rehabilitation, or nursing home). This likely contributes to our finding that lower social support is associated with high-intensity healthcare services, lower outpatient rehabilitation attendance, greater rehospitalisation and poorer survival. Given our evidence, the first step to improve cardiac outcomes is acknowledging that social health is part of the decision-making process. Incorporating a formal assessment of social support into healthcare management plans will likely improve cardiac outcomes and survival. Further research is required to assess if support person/s need to engage in the risk reduction behaviours themselves for outpatient rehabilitation to be effective. Further synthesis of the impact of social isolation and loneliness on health service utilisation and survival after a CVD event is required.

1. Introduction

Cardiovascular disease (CVD) is the leading cause of death globally [1] and carries a high economic burden, which is driven largely by productivity and direct healthcare costs [2,3]. It is essential to identify factors that influence health service utilisation and subsequent CVD events, to mitigate the significant health and economic burden of CVD. Poor social health is a modifiable risk factor for CVD [4] and mortality [5] and also carries a high health and economic burden. Social health refers to a person's ability to form fulfilling, meaningful relationships; a person's ability to adapt in social situations; and support from other people, institutions, and services. The concepts of social isolation, loneliness, and social support are often discussed in relation to social health. How these concepts are defined

Heart Disease Gerdi Weidner, Mária Kopp, Margareta Kristenson, 2002 Annotation This book addresses one major question Why do men get more heart disease than women Recent global trends in heart disease show that traditional coronary risk factors such as elevated blood pressure and cholesterol are poor candidates in explaining the gender gap in heart disease Changes in these risk factors also cannot explain the recent cardiovascular disease epidemic among middle aged men in Eastern Europe This book will focus on environmental behavioral and psychosocial variables as well as new risk factors of a biological nature in an attempt to understand the gender gap in heart disease It combines perspectives from numerous disciplines such as demography epidemiology medicine sociology and psychology This book features the work of a distinguished group of international researchers appearing in Richard Stone's report on Stress the invisible hand in Eastern Europe's death rates Science vol 288 June 9 2000 pp 1732-33 It combines perspectives from numerous disciplines such as demography epidemiology medicine nutrition sociology and psychology to explore the environmental behavioral and psychosocial influences on men's greater susceptibility to heart disease

Behavioral Medicine Approaches to Cardiovascular Disease Prevention Kristina Orth-Gomér, Neil Schneiderman, Kristina Orth-Gomér, 2013-05-13 Cardiovascular disease CVD is the number one killer of men and women in industrialized countries In older age groups CVD is also the most important cause for hospitalization and in many countries it is the basis of early retirement from work Thus CVD is associated with enormous costs for care and loss of productivity as well as for disabilities pensions etc All this has motivated clinicians and scientists to develop and implement new methodologies and technologies to better care for patients who are hospitalized for heart disease Efforts to improve care in the acute phases of coronary heart disease CHD have been successful During the last decade the immediate mortality risk of a patient admitted to coronary care for a suspected myocardial infarction or other acute coronary syndrome has decreased to less than 10% Despite these achievements CVD continues to represent a major threat to the health of middle aged and elderly men and women This volume addresses myriad aspects of CHD prevention including biobehavioral and psychosocial factors behavioral epidemiology behavioral intervention models and policy The first section of the text provides an introduction to CVD prevention and behavioral medicine The second section introduces two theoretically different approaches to preventive action high risk and population based strategies The third section describes and discusses the important questions of how behavioral sciences can be conceptually integrated into traditional medically based preventive efforts The fourth section presents both population and high risk behavioral intervention approaches In summary this volume examines the social environment and its potentials for preventive actions reviews the psychosocial and biobehavioral mechanisms involved in these effects and describes concrete and practical implementations of behavioral medicine knowledge as they have been applied to CHD prevention NIH Guide for Grants and Contracts National Institutes of Health (U.S.),1989

Health Psychology of Women Catherine Niven, Doug Carroll, 2013-12-16 First Published in 1993 Since health psychology is concerned with the universal values of life and death well being and suffering it might be expected that its researchers would be keen to examine both male and female experiences of these phenomena In practice however health psychology has followed health research in adopting a largely male perspective both in its general approach and selection of topics Women are different from men not only in terms of anatomy but in terms of the socialization processes to which they have been exposed and the social and economic positions they occupy These differences have a significant impact on women s health predisposing them to some disorders and protecting them from others While it is true that male mortality exceeds female mortality from conception to old age women s survival has the price of increased mental and physical illness Men die but women suffer Despite a growing awareness of these differences there continues to be a distinct bias towards using male subjects for research and studying those diseases which affect more men than women The Health Psychology of Women is a response to this imbalance and a challenge to the attitude which explores the behavior of half the population in order to draw conclusions about the experience of the whole It is essential reading for students and researchers of psychology and health and health professionals in training and practice
