The Life of a Colonial Child

The life of a colonial child was tough, but not lonely. Families were large, because they had no big playgrounds or toys. They had to make their own toys. They had to make their own clothes. They had to make their own food. They had to make their own beds. They had to make their own everything.

Learning to read and write was considered important for girls. Most were taught to read and write. They had to make their own clothes. They had to make their own food. They had to make their own beds. They had to make their own everything.

You might disagree with this. But that's the way it was.
