Purpose: Utilizing teacher socialization in physical education theory, the aim of this study was to develop a survey to measure physical education teachers' socialization experiences and comprehensive school physical activity program involvement. Method: Instrument development included a review of existing comprehensive school physical activity program and socialization instruments, Delphi method to evaluate face and content validity through expert feedback, and a pilot test to examine the instrument's psychometric properties. Results: Upon completion of expert feedback, three items were removed, four items were revised, and open-ended questions were added to each survey construct. The pilot test yielded 28 completed surveys (40% response rate). Bayesian exploratory factor analytic procedures showed that items had statistically significant loadings and were quality measures of the corresponding constructs. Survey subscales had acceptable and high internal consistency coefficients. Discussion/Conclusion: Results suggest that this instrument is a trustworthy tool for continued research examining physical education teachers' socialization and comprehensive school physical activity program involvement.

Keywords: CSPAP, teacher socialization in physical education, survey, assessment, whole-of-school approach

A comprehensive school physical activity program (CSPAP) is a nationally recommended framework for school-based PA promotion (Society for Health and Physical Educators of America [SHAPE America], 2015). A CSPAP is identified as a coordinated, multicomponent, "whole-of-school approach" to achieve two major goals: (a) educate school-aged children with the knowledge and skills necessary to lead a lifetime of PA and (b) ensure that school-aged children meet the recommended 60 min of daily PA (SHAPE America, 2015). The framework includes five components: (a) physical education, (b) PA during school, (c) PA before and after school, (d) staff involvement, and (e) family and community engagement.

Research supports the effectiveness of each CSPAP component in helping to increase PA in school-aged children (Chen & Gu, 2018; Erwin et al., 2013). However, implementation of five CSPAP components is limited (i.e., 16% of elementary schools, American Alliance for Health, Physical Education, Recreation and Dance [AAHPERD], 2011; 3% of secondary schools, Brenner et al., 2017). Webster et al. (2020a) have recommended approaching the conceptualization and implementation of CSPAPs with greater flexibility. In addition to quality physical education as the foundation of the program, schools may differ in the number and combination of other components they choose to implement.

Physical education teachers (PETs) are recommended to serve as school-wide PA leaders (PALs) who lead, advocate, and organize CSPAPs (Stoepler et al., 2020a). The knowledge and skills recommended to serve in such a role extend beyond what has customarily been taught in PET education (PETEd) programs or been traditionally modeled and expected of PETs in K–12 school settings (Webster et al., 2015). Previous literature has recommended that PETs receive training and exposure with PA promotion to effectively serve as a school PAL (Dauenhauer et al., 2018; Kelder et al., 2014). Furthermore, the CSPAP literature suggests that competence (i.e., beliefs and confidence) is a critical consideration for PETs and classroom teachers who implement CSPAPs based on their lifetime experiences as a K–12 student and within teacher certification training programs (Webster, 2011; Webster et al., 2010, 2013, 2015). Lived experiences socialize individuals to learn skills, knowledge, values, and norms of occupations (Clausen, 1968); however, the examination of experiences and lifetime factors influencing PETs' involvement with CSPAP is limited and worthy of exploration (Carson & Webster, 2020; Webster et al., 2020a, 2020b).

Theoretical Framework

A lens to examine how a PET's lifetime experiences are associated with current behaviors and instructional practices is teacher socialization in physical education theory (socialization). Socialization describes how a PET's attitudes, beliefs, and teaching practices are influenced by their lived experiences throughout a lifetime, which are categorized into three distinct, nonlinear phases: (a) acculturation (AC), (b) professional socialization (PS), and (c) organizational socialization (OS; Lacey, 1977; Lawson 1983a, 1983b). Framing "lived experiences" around the phases of socialization theory is advantageous for researchers to identify lifetime factors that influence PET's current CSPAP involvement (Carson & Webster, 2020; Richards et al., 2014, 2019).

The first phase of socialization (i.e., AC) is defined as any K–12 childhood experience that has an impact on a PET's attitudes and behaviors toward the teaching profession (Lawson, 1983a).

were comprised of formal and informal interviews focus group interviews observations film snippets fictional curriculum plans and official documents Data were reduced to key themes by employing standard interpretive methods Using occupational socialization theory three groups of teachers were identified non teachers conservatives and progressives Each teacher group was closely aligned to orientations for teaching and coaching Orientations had been formed during their acculturation and were largely untouched or reinforced by their physical education teacher education PETE and the cultures in which they worked generally supported the non teachers perspective Three forms of WES were identified those that involved students participating in in school activities and out of school activities in lieu of physical education and innovative waivers that gave administrators the power to curtail provision of the subject WES were primarily favored by everyone with the exception of most physical education teachers WES evolved from marginalization of physical education in relation to academic subjects and competitive sport as well as poor physical education The findings provided clues as to how the cycle of poor and non teaching produced by the current pattern of socialization into physical education might be broken Practical implications focused on the need for careful selection of preservice teachers ways in which to deliver PETE and the need for increased accountability in schools

Occupational socialization OS research has assisted in training preservice and developing inservice mainstream physical education teachers Study one examined OS s influence on the practices and perspectives of adapted physical educators APEs Qualitative data were analyzed using analytic induction and constant comparison The APEs possessed traditional or progressive teaching orientations having been indirectly attracted to a career as an APE through participation in sport and physical activity and interactions with persons with disabilities High quality adapted physical education teacher education A PETE appeared to exert a powerful influence on their values and pedagogies School cultures and conditions experienced upon workforce entry served to either support or negate their programs Several hypotheses are provided regarding the influences of acculturation professional socialization and OS on inservice APEs teaching The second study described OS s impact on nine Korean teachers reading and delivery of PE Qualitative data were analyzed by analytic induction and constant comparison Findings showed the teachers underwent a unique pattern of OS resulting in seven of them possessing teaching orientations one being coaching oriented and one having a non teaching orientation The teachers acculturation led to a high proportion of them being teaching oriented on entering PETE where traditional PETE reinforced this orientation Innovative school cultures offset and compensated for the weak PETE experienced by some teachers Suggestions for future research in this line were made The third study examined OS s influences on 11 international sport pedagogy faculty members FMs perspectives and practices regarding physical education teaching and PETE Data sources formal and informal interviews and documents illustrating the FMs practices were analyzed using constant comparison and analytic induction FMs current perspectives and practices did not differ from those espoused by native born FMs and there were few differences between perspectives and practices of FMs from different regions of the world The acculturation primary professional socialization and primary OS of most FMs had been positive leading to them possess strong traditional teaching orientations early in their careers FMs secondary professional socialization generally impacted their development of progressive ideas about physical education and PETE FMs secondary organizational socialization was also largely supportive of these progressive beliefs

Teaching Personal and Social Responsibility through Physical Activity Don Hellison, Paul M. Wright, Thomas J. Martinek, David S. Walsh, 2025-04-15

Teaching Personal and Social Responsibility Through Physical Activity now enters its fourth edition, continuing the legacy of Don Hellison and his teaching personal and social responsibility (TPSR) model. This text is the only comprehensive resource covering the TPSR model through physical activity. With more than 50 years of use in gyms, playing fields, and classrooms, the TPSR model has withstood the test of time and continues to be used to teach transferable life skills to kids from all backgrounds to support positive social change. Building on the foundation of research from the first three editions, this updated text connects TPSR to the recent emphasis on mental health, social and emotional learning (SEL), and trauma-informed practices. It also provides direction to teach affective and social goals, giving an in-depth look into teaching character development and values to help students develop personal and social responsibility. Designed to enhance reader comprehension, Teaching Personal and Social Responsibility Through Physical Activity, Fourth Edition is a practical resource with proven and easy-to-implement ideas to support student growth in school, after school, and in alternative settings. Special features include these TPSR in Action sidebars, written by world-wide practitioners that highlight the creativity and innovation of TPSR through programs and projects across cultural and linguistic borders; Is It Working? examples of the cutting-edge research that supports TPSR; Kid Quotes, quotes from kids in TPSR programs as well as quotes from teachers and coaches; Takeaways, summary points in every chapter; Robust appendixes, samples of TPSR lesson plans, a TPSR implementation checklist, a kinesiology career club workbook, a post-teaching reflection, and a TPSR feedback form. Online resources, forms, unit and lesson plans, and learner assessments from the book that can be easily downloaded and used. Balancing theory and practice, the TPSR model is recognized as a best practice in physical education and sport-based youth development. This text takes Hellison's model and reflects on new information, cultural awareness, and current practice to ensure that kids benefit from the TPSR model for years to come. The Socialization of Teachers who Teach Young Students Experiencing Physical Disability in Physical Education Christina Swett, 2016

The purpose of this study was to explore the socialization of teachers in physical education with a focus on their experiences of teaching and learning to teach children living with physical disabilities. Data were collected using qualitative interviews and through analysis of program calendars for publicly funded institutions offering pre service teacher education programs Despite being largely viewed as the least effective form of socialization pre service teacher education has the potential to influence a teacher s confidence and performance in the classroom Results of this study indicate that the socialization experiences of teachers continue to be strong indicators of performance and that both specialist and generalist teachers lack positive socialization experiences that include students with physical disabilities in physical education This limits the experience knowledge and skills they have to draw on in their physical education teaching practice Coupled with a lack of resources and expertise available teachers are left under prepared and without enough resources to provide high quality physical education to children living with physical disabilities
