

DICHERS: DPESTLS SPECIAL EDUCATION

The first educational institutions were established in the 18th century, but it was not until the 19th century that the first special education schools were founded. The first special education school was founded in 1774 in the United States, and it was called the "School for the Deaf and Dumb." The school was founded by Dr. Thomas Hopkins Gallaudet, who was a deaf man himself. Gallaudet was the first deaf person to be educated in the United States, and he was the first deaf person to be a teacher. The school was founded in the town of Westford, Massachusetts, and it was the first of many special education schools that were founded in the United States. The school was founded to provide education for deaf and dumb children, and it was the first of many special education schools that were founded in the United States.
