

Feed, M. T. Anderson's Novel Issues

Topic: Literature | Words: 1386 | Pages: 5

Feed, M. T. Anderson's novel, shows how technology, accessibility to goods and services, and the world of free entertainment make society morally starving. The work, written in 2002, is relevant nowadays as all the principles and behavior patterns observed there can still be noticed in today's community. Besides, this book demonstrates a good example of a person whose character is able to withstand all invisible scourges of such a world that seems to be ideal from first sight. This essay represents similarities between the fictional society depicted in a book and the one that exists in the real world in the 21st century. Moreover, it is necessary to answer the question, how a person can "resist the feed" and what it can be done for.

Technologies have become an inevitable part of every person's life. Now almost everything can be done with the help of machinery. What is more, nearly everything is available in modern society as it is in Feed. Feed in M.T. Anderson's book is an implanted device that allows a person to get whatever he or she wants or needs. There is not anything impossible for people in such an environment. By the way, people are forced to buy products the corporations produce with the help of Feed as the educational system is controlled by brands with School. If to think properly about it, there is a large number of similarities with the principles the community exists in now. Technologies, various goods, and services influence people daily; some of them even have problems with overdosing consumption. For example, after purchasing goods in online shops, various advertisements appear on the Internet even if we do not want them. This is the way producers gain control over people's consumption ways and patterns of buying things. Besides, the dystopian
