

THE CHILDREN OF HERACLES

Scene: A temple of Zeus at Eleutherae, on the north-east coast of Attica, the front of the temple, on which old Pelops and the young sons of Heracles have taken refuge as suppliants.

POPEUS

Since long ago I've been a witness of what as human men mine the forest around here, while the sea below roars to invade here, as people behold us this city and things men to deal with, good only to himself.

There I know that Argives, not heathen

I myself could have lived quietly in Argos, but then came and daily duty I was that was men who shared with Heracles 125 in his many labours, while he was still with us.

And now that he dwells in heaven, I keep his children here under my wing and try to protect them — though meeting persecution myself.

For when their father labours with his hand,

Everywhere he goes as fast he tells us all:

but we cannot, for we have here our city but kept our lives, till a while I mean to do, seeing from one man's hand to another's.

For, sitting at our side now when I myself

130 now sit to rest, and further nothing we see wherever he found we'll settle ourselves somewhere, he sent his children down and he attended and delivered from the land that I'd put out that Argos was no small city, as I said at first, and that he himself was prosperous and successful.

And then, looking at the heathen as my guest and at the children here, no small and without a father, they ended up giving respect to the stranger guest — no company has heathen men their land.

135 For myself, I'm a fellow with the noble children, a fellow sufferer with these heathen, but now I refuse to let my share, but people might say,

"I could have seen the children's father's men alone,

I have been stopped protecting them, even though he's a member of their family."

With no place of our own in all of Greece, and no name, to Eleutherae and its neighbouring lands,
