

THE CHILD'S CONSTRUCTION OF THE CURRICULUM

GABRIELLE M. IVINSON¹

Open University, UK

Abstract: The curriculum both as a whole and in its parts can be understood as a social representation. Teachers' social representations of the curriculum, instantiated in classroom practice and discourse, provide the resources from which children internalize the curriculum. Children re-construct the curriculum as an active process that depends both on the development of their own socio-cognitive resources and on the structuration provided in specific classrooms.

The paper investigates how children in classrooms with different types of structuration represent the curriculum and how these change over time. Comparable case studies were carried out in schools chosen to reflect three types of curriculum organization. Twelve classrooms took part in the study including two parallel classrooms in each school and at each of two year groups. Ethnographic investigations were employed to compile a typology of classroom practices used to map the range and type of curriculum structuration in each classroom. Children's representations of the curriculum were investigated through a sorting task. Analysis focused on both children's performance and their talk about the task.

Findings demonstrate significant differences in the classificatory systems used by children according to year group and type of curriculum. Conclusions suggest: that as children gain experience of schooling they construct more elaborate social representations of the curriculum regardless of curriculum type; that between the two year groups categories undergo qualitative transformations and that curriculum structuration becomes more a feature of the way the older children re-construct the curriculum, specifically the collection type curriculum which facilitated the re-construction of a markedly different curriculum in comparison to the other types.

Understanding Children's Development Peter K. Smith, Helen Cowie, Mark Blades, 2015-12-14 Understanding Children's Development is the UK's best selling developmental psychology textbook and has been widely acclaimed for its international coverage and rigorous research based approach This dynamic text emphasizes the practical and applied implications of developmental research It begins by introducing the ways in which psychologists study developmental processes before going on to consider all major aspects of development from conception through to adolescence Children's books, brain development, and language acquisition Ralf Thiede, 2018-11-13 This book correlates English speaking children's brain development and acquisition of language with the linguistic input that comes from children's books Drawing from the most current research on the developing brain the author demonstrates how language acquisition is exclusively interactive and highlights the benefit that accrues when that interaction includes the exploratory language play found in early childhood literature Through discussions of specific domains of grammar the relation of these domains to children's literature through scaffolding and the resultant linguistic and cognitive advantages for the child this volume offers an innovative approach to early brain maturation Children's Early Text Construction Clotilde Pontecorvo, Margherita Orsolini, Barbara Burge, Lauren B. Resnick, 2014-02-04 For decades research on children's literacy has been dominated by questions of how children learn to read Especially among Anglophone scholars cognitive and psycholinguistic research on reading has been the only approach to studying written language education Echoing this debates on methods of teaching children to read have long dominated the educational scene This book presents an alternative view In recent years writing has emerged as a central aspect of becoming literate Research in cognitive psychology has shown that writing is a highly complex activity involving a degree of planning unknown in everyday conversational uses of language At the same time developmental studies have revealed that when young children are asked to write they show a surprisingly sophisticated understanding of the representational constraints of alphabetic writing systems They show this understanding long before they can read conventional writing on their own The rich structure of meanings involved in the word text provided the glue that brought together a group of scholars from several disciplines in an international workshop held in Rome Reflecting the state of the field at the time the majority of the workshop participants were scholars working in languages other than English especially the romance languages Their work mirrors a linguistic and psychological research tradition that Anglophone scholars knew little of until recently This volume provides English language readers with updated versions of the papers presented at the meeting The topics discussed at the workshop are represented in the chapters as follows the relationship between acquisition of language and familiarity with written texts the reciprocal permeability between spoken and written language the initial phases of text construction by children and the educational conditions that facilitate written language acquisition and writing practice

The Development of Past Tense

Morphology in L2 Spanish M. Rafael Salaberry, 2001-02-12 This book presents an extended analysis of the development of L2 Spanish past tense morphology among L1 English speaking learners The study addresses three major questions 1 what is the developmental pattern of acquisition of past tense verbal morphology among tutored learners 2 what are the relevant factors that may account for the particular distribution of morphological endings especially at the beginning stages and 3 how does instruction affect the movement from one stage to the next The analysis provides a reassessment of the general claim of Andersen's lexical aspect hypothesis and proposes minor changes that may render the hypothesis more appropriate for especially L2 classroom learning The study includes an overview of theoretical positions on the notion of lexical versus grammatical aspect and a comparison of the findings from previous empirical studies on the development of past tense verbal morphology among both classroom and naturalistic learners

The Development of Young Children's Social-Cognitive Skills Michael A. Forrester, 2013-10-23 Understanding how young children begin to make sense out of the social world has become a major concern within developmental psychology Over the last 25 years research in this area has raised a number of questions which mirror the confluence of interests from cognitive developmental and social developmental psychology The aims of this book are to consider critically the major themes and findings within this growing social cognitive developmental research and to present a new theoretical framework for investigating children's social cognitive skills Beyond being the first major review of the literature in this area this synopsis articulates why contemporary theoretical ideas e.g. information processing Piagetian and social interactionist are unlikely ever to provide the conceptual basis for understanding children's participative skills Building upon ideas both within and beyond mainstream developmental psychology the eco-structural approach advocated seeks to draw together the advantages of the ecological approach in perceptual psychology with the considerable insights of the conversational analysts child language researchers and Goffman's analysis of social interaction This convergence is centred around the dynamic and participatory realities of engaging in conversational contexts the locus for acquiring social cognitive skills The framework provides the building blocks for models of developmental social cognition which can accommodate dynamic aspects of children's conversational skills This book then is a review of an important area of developmental psychology a new perspective on how we can study children's participatory social cognitive skills and a summary of supporting research for the framework advocated
