Spatial Strategies in Retailing R. Laulajainen, 2012-12-06 Locational research has long been concerned with industrial plants and the site selection of retail stores The major determinants and decision processes now seem to be fairly well understood Consequently the research frontier in retailing has shifted to a higher spatial level the location of stores in the regional and national context Certainly stores tend to be found where the population is but beyond this obvious truth it is by no means outright clear how retailing companies with different formats and home bases perceive space and how space affects their performance if at all When the question is put this way what appears trivial at first undergoes a change and seems now complex enough to be worth a closer look It need not be true to cite the most obvious of examples that regions which are attractive as places of living for high school and college students the customary data base are also worthwhile from the business point of view No attempt is made here to penetrate the topic at analytical depth The ambition is simply to discover with the help of numerous descriptive examples whether any order does exist in the high level spatial behavior of retailing companies
