

Wakatake (Wakatake) Subpopulation: Wakatake is an aggregation of subpopulations and non-mammalian carbon and sulfur areas with a little more than 100 million population in an area of about 4000 sq km, designated on the south side of the main Hainan Island, a tributary of the Changjiang in eastern India.

At one time it became the second capital of British India, but the great architectural monuments erected by its rulers are mostly in ruins. The second world war brought a further partition of Bengal and influx of refugees, industrial decline and deterioration of urban services – all contributed to this. There were two cities, one legal and another non-legal – the shadow city of slums and squatters. Yet Kolkata harbours diversity and is cultural capital of India.

A Basic Development Plan was prepared in 1966 by Calcutta Metropolitan Planning Organization with the help of the Ford Foundation. This was a departure from conventional township and objectives were: to arrest deterioration, to utilize existing facilities and to provide for new growth. The basic strategy was to provide an efficient infrastructure before major residential projects could begin with a lack of rebuilding.

During the past few years (from three decades), countries (Korea, Japan, Malaysia, Singapore, Hong Kong, etc.) have achieved remarkable economic growth and development. They have developed a strong and stable financial system, a sound and efficient legal system, a well-developed infrastructure, a highly educated and skilled workforce, and a strong and vibrant private sector. They have also achieved a high level of social and environmental protection, and a high level of public administration. These achievements have been the result of a combination of factors, including a strong and vibrant private sector, a sound and efficient legal system, a well-developed infrastructure, a highly educated and skilled workforce, and a strong and vibrant private sector. Many new projects will come up in the future. There is increasing amount of liquid and solid waste and this is a resource in age-old indigenous practices in the wetlands of the pampas. The waste water is recycled with phytochemicals process which generates rich production. Solid waste is naturally composted and used as fertilizer. The green waste is used as green manure. The urban wastewater is processed in green buffer zones, which are planted and creating a blue and green buffer. One such area has become a nature park.

There is need for inclusive growth, and a vision for sustainable development. The reenvisioning of urban environmental design has begun with promise and boldness. But various engineering projects are yet to be either an integral urban design structure. Perhaps the tremendous possibilities of designing and redesigning.
