

Diagram of the human eye showing internal structures.

The eye is a complex organ that allows us to see. It consists of several parts, including the cornea, lens, and retina. The cornea is the front part of the eye that helps to focus light. The lens is a small, clear structure that can change shape to focus light on the retina. The retina is the back part of the eye that contains light-sensitive cells called rods and cones. These cells send signals to the brain, which interprets them as images.

There are two types of light-sensitive cells in the retina: rods and cones. Rods are responsible for vision in low light conditions, while cones are responsible for color vision. The brain receives signals from these cells and interprets them as images. This process is called vision.
