The Extraordinary Sayings Of Ordinary People:

The Extraordinary Sayings of Ordinary People James Labrador, 2003 This book is a compilation of sayings Not old and revered sayings from historical characters but rather ordinary people from all walks of life and nationalities Its contents are the result of a self conceived project in which people were approached by the author during a twelve year period and were asked to create by using their mental acumen and lifetime experience an entirely new saying of their own The premise upon which the project was based was the following Must a saying attain immortality only because it was uttered by a famous character Isn't the ordinary human being capable of formulating truly quotable thoughts if sufficiently and properly motivated Utilizing as base of operations his home city of Victoria Canada the author began approaching totally unknown individuals from the world over and proposed the idea to them People from different nationalities occupations and age groups were asked to participate in the project in a voluntary way by submitting a thought an insight a perceived truth which would have sufficient intellectual weight to be considered as a quotable saying that could help to enrich world culture The only condition being their contribution had to be totally new and original During the duration of the project the author received nearly a thousand replies two hundred of which were chosen to appear in this book Those chosen were selected by their ingenuity and overall appeal Concurrently the author invested a considerable amount of effort trying to verify that the sayings received were not a case of plagiarism and were truly authentic The results speak for themselves and the author leaves on the hands of the readers the final word regarding the entertaining value of the book
