Turning points in South African History: 1948

Racial Segregation Before Apartheid

Segregation in South Africa can be traced back to colonisation.

Powerful nations seized control of African countries, imposing their culture and language on them, e.g. Britain colonising South Africa

Britain defeated the Boers in the South African War (1899-1902), and post-war negotiations resulted in the Union of South Africa and the South Africa Act (1910).

- This gave white people complete political control over all race groups, resulting in black South Africans being politically excluded in South Africa.
- The Natives Land Act (1913) allocated 87% of land to white South Africans.
- The Urban Areas Act (1923) introduced residential segregation and offered cheap black labour to white-owned enterprises.
- The Colour Bar Act (1926) reserved skilled jobs for white people.

1948: the National Party comes into power

Post World War II, the National Party (NP) was elected in 1948 and implemented apartheid in South Africa's first democratic election in 1994.

The NP began to legislate Apartheid by passing laws against non-white people.
