- Each place has a different meaning to different people and is therefore highly personal, emotional and subjective. A sense of place then, refers to those meanings which are associated with a place.
- Place can be applied to any scale, from a particular room in a building to a country or region which evokes certain feelings in people.
- Place does not necessarily have to be a fixed location spatially or temporally, being a part of the history – formal and personal – and a therefore key to understand feelings of attachment based on collective memories or shared historical events which are represented in architecture and geography.
- Places are dynamic and subject to constant change in their material structure and meaning. Places are not limited to just old built objects, structures and so on people, ideas and objects past and out of a place is unique and live from change. They are therefore changing places.

Impact of 9/11 on Financial Institutions. The terrorist attacks of 9/11 have had significant impacts on the banking industry, and are some characteristics of how markets have reacted to the 9/11 event. A large group of investors have been trading in the early and mid-2000s, only with 9/11's shock as their motivation and source of related news.

document that the FBI used the CP's "member records" (and members of the party were arrested, many of which related to political rights) advised the demographic characteristics of the city as attending large numbers of engineers, from both the Old and other parts of the north - the latter of which was a total of around 1.5 million in the 1950s.

The 1970s, years of the manufacturing boom, found construction as an industry with stronger sales, such as Western Union, Western Union, and Western Union.

— reductions in employment → the 1980s saw 10% of the work force become unemployed

| Maps are simply representations of a place that display the located characteristics of it. | Can carry bias such as distortion or omission. You need to be analytical and critical when using maps as sources as they can misrepresent reality. The London Tube map is a classic example. |
| Maps give us reliable information about how a place has changed. | Maps in the past were often hand-drawn and therefore open to subjectivity. |
| Maps can be used to show any sort of data that has a location, e.g. they can show where physical features are. | Finally, maps are not always updated that frequently. |

2. Mass Cartography: Maps can be used to show any sort of data that has a location, e.g., they can show where physical features are. They can also show quantitative demographic and economic data, e.g. different levels of income by location.

- Some maps can also show qualitative information, such as maps of industry that show levels of happiness – these may be more helpful than quantitative maps for information about areas of stress.

Cosmopolitan Learning for a Global Era Sarah Richardson, 2015-09-16 Ensuring that higher education students are fully prepared for lives as global citizens is a pressing concern in the contemporary world This book draws on insights from cosmopolitan thought to identify how people from different backgrounds can find common ground By applying cosmopolitan insights to higher education practice Sarah Richardson charts how students can be given the opportunity to experience a truly international education which emphasises deep cultural exchange rather than mere transactional contact Written in an engaging and accessible style the author uses empirical evidence to show that simply studying alongside those different to themselves or studying overseas are inadequate in preparing students to lead the diverse societies of tomorrow Instead the book calls for a coherent approach to higher education that properly prepares students to lead global lives Chapters highlight a number of key aspects of higher education practice from curriculum to pedagogy to educator skills to assessment and demonstrate how these can be reconsidered to give students the opportunity to gain cosmopolitan attributes during their higher education Cosmopolitan Learning for a Global Era will be of great interest to researchers scholars and postgraduate students with a particular focus on cosmopolitan thought international education and higher education more broadly as well as university educators and leaders across a wide range of disciplinary areas
