

Critical Technologies Reports

The second recent line of activity with major implications for U.S. technology policy and competitiveness is a series of projects aimed at identifying critical technologies. The basic concept behind critical technologies is the need to focus attention and resources on important areas of technology.

With some exceptions, the reports do not address questions of what kinds of actions need to be taken by government or the private sector to ensure U.S. leadership and participation in the critical technologies. The identification of critical technologies in the reports, whether sponsored by government or the private sector, does not necessarily imply government action. Yet the reports may give this impression, because they generally stress the federal role and provide few, if any, details on the private sector role.

As noted in the previous section, the federal government has for years supported certain specific areas of commercial technology. These programs—exemplified by the Hatch Act of 1887 (which created the Agricultural Extension Service), the National Advisory Committee on Aeronautics founded in 1915, and more recently SEMATECH and the Manufacturing Technology Centers—have generally been ad hoc, narrowly focused, and isolated from broader national policies.⁸ The current effort to identify critical technologies is to some extent an attempt to approach such governmental involvement in a more systematic manner—that is, to help set priorities among the many requests for government support for commercial technologies and to establish a framework for public and private sector actions.

Several lists of critical technologies have been compiled. Each represents an attempt at achieving agreement among an important set of players in national technology policy that a particular set of technologies is in some respect critical to the future of the United States. Some have been prepared by federal government agencies, others by private groups. Some focus on technology needs for U.S. industrial competitiveness, others on defense technology needs. Each group means something different by “critical” technology.

The critical technologies reports reviewed here are listed in Table 1. The reports’ origin, focus, and criteria for selecting critical technologies are summarized. The critical technologies identified in each report are summarized in Table 3.
