went off to the judge to complain of his father's having been killed. The rich brother when he came to the judge laid his complaint before him telling him that his brother had pulled out his horse's tail. Now the poor man had taken a stone and wrapped it in a cloth and he stood with it in his hand behind his brother intending to kill the judge if he did not decide in his favour. The judge thought the man had brought a hundred roubles for him in the cloth so he ordered the rich man to give his horse to the poor man until the tail was grown again. Then came the son to complain to the judge of the poor man having slain his father. The poor man again took the stone wrapped in the cloth and showed it to the judge who thought the man must there have two hundred roubles to give to him for deciding the case. So he ordered the son to take his place upon the bridge and the poor man to stand below. Then the son was to throw himself off the bridge on to the poor man and crush him to death.
